NES (4 Game Cartridges, 6 playable games)

History of Ownership:

I bought the NES and SNES at the same time in January 2004. Since then I've collected 6 NES games and 12 SNES games. I wanted a NES so I could play the original authentic Super Mario Bros on an authentic NES. The game was free with the console along with the 2 controllers. I believe I bought both Super Mario 2 and 3 and Mega Man for 12 dollars each. I played the NES a lot for about a month, and then stopped playing it. I am a graphics enthusiast. I won't put 100 dollars into a system that has been died for 12 years! I realize that some people do – but it's my money and I rather spend it on current generation videogame consoles. I hardly have any money to spend on anything.

SNES is a slightly different story. I bought a SNES in January along with Super Mario World. When I got home, I remember Super Mario World did not work. I thought it was the console, but I found out that it was because the cartridge has never been cleaned with a swab and pure alcohol. When I cleaned the cartridge a lot of dark stuff came off of the cartridge feed! I clean all my cartridges now. All of them should play like new. The most expensive game I bought for SNES has to be Super Mario RPG for 50 dollars. When the game was new in 1996 – I hear it was 70 dollars. That is way too much for a game. It is that much because it's pretty rare used like it is. Not as rare as Mega Man X2 or Mega Man X3, but just as rare as Final Fantasy 2 and Final Fantasy 3. I am happy I had a chance of owning Super Mario RPG. It's considered to be one of the best games and a 10 in the graphics department. SMRPG uses a decompression chip inside the cartridge called the SG-1 which decompresses data inside the cartridge amongst other things. It is said to be a cut-down version of the SNES main CPU which explains why it was more than average SNES games at the time. I knew exactly how it played because I collect Super NES ROMs and that game happened to be one I tested out with an emulator. I must have spent 200 dollars on SNES games. I don't believe I'll add any more. It's a fine system, but I want games for other consoles too. Plus, wouldn't you agree that 12 games is a healthy amount?

Sega Genesis I got 2 months ago for 40 dollars and I got Sonic 2 for free. Toyriific had so many copies of Sonic and Sonic 2 that they just give them to new owners. It's rarer for someone to buy a used old school console like Genesis at their store so they have a hard time selling them. Ironically, Game Stop had clear its inventory of Genesis games because they couldn't make them sell. I bought a Genesis so I could play Contra Hard Corps on an authentic Genesis. It was fun but now it's in a box. One thing that Toyriific have done which didn't cost me anything is they've cleaned the console feed and the console itself. When I got a Nintendo, Super Nintendo and Genesis - the console feeds were really clean from the start. Luckily, I got mine in good condition.

Total money spent on SNES : $250

Total money spent on Genesis $100

I almost thought twice about owning a Sega Genesis. The reason is I would have to buy games for it. I only spent 100 dollars total both on Genesis hardware and software. And if you're thinking why don't I spend money on a Sega Master's System. My answer to you would be "No way Man!"

Bought Nintendo Dual Screen today (2004-11-27 16:10)

Firstly, I like to announce that I bought a silver Nintendo Dual Screen today with Super Mario 64 DS costing me a total of 195 dollars. The NDS package comes with a stylist (pen), AC adapter, thumb strap, handheld manual, free Metroid Prime Hunters demo, and a fully charged Nintendo DS out of the box. The NDS (official abbreviation) has a cool echo effect with its speakers. The size of the cartridge is roughly the size of the sticker of any Gameboy Advance game. As you can tell Super Mario 64 is no match for Super Mario 64 DS. You can fit 8 NDS flash cards to equal 1 N64 cartridge and the NDS shown that it holds as much if not more data as N64 games. I started up NDS and I started playing Yoshi. This came to no surprise since I read the reviews, and the writers all wrote that I start with Yoshi. I find it easier to use my thumb than the stylist. I drag my thumb across the screen as I would an analog stick – and it gives it the “analog stick effect”. I still can’t believe that Nintendo made NDS games this small and the maximum Nintendo is developing can carry 1 GB of data! Yes, developers can put FMV on the DS if they want too. The developers will use MPEG4 or something like that. A 3 minute FMV can be less than 40 MB! I made a dumb decision..... I ripped the box open. I was much more careful with my GBA boxes – but no, I had to rip the end open to get to the handheld! The box is not completely destroyed - just the edge of it is.

Super Mario 64 DS is confusing to me when I read many of the reviews. I knew that Super Mario 64 was going to be re-released but I thought it was on a bonus disc for Super Mario Sunshine not for Nintendo’s 64-bit handheld. The truth is it’s also the best launch title for the NDS just like it was for N64 percentage wise. I thought their 64-bit handheld would be another Gameboy Advance. Okay, it’s Mario, so therefore, it has to be above 9.0! IGN gave the game a 8.9 out of 10. That’s not a 9.0. They said that SM64DS could have better game play than it already has. The Nintendo 64 was designed for Super Mario 64. The SM64 development team and Nintendo 64 R & D3 team worked side by side. The result is one of the most famous Nintendo 64 games. Nintendo thought, “Maybe we can show SM64 on the DS since it is 64-bit.” It was truly an easy decision for Nintendo because the game was already made – the game just had to be ported and expansion. Super Mario 64 DS is really an expansion pack that allows wireless multi-player experience, and 30 more stars to add to the original 120 stars. Apparently if you find a Mario cap – Yoshi can change into Mario. If he finds a Luigi cap – he can change into Luigi and so on. Gaming sites are giving it above a 9.0, and as much as a 9.6 in some cases. We have never had a videogame that was a technical marvel 8 years before and still hold that in present day. SM64DS is definitely the first to do this.

DS cartridge is no bigger than a quarter!

Top games according to Gamerankings.com. I have 5 of the 10.

DS Features:

- One color – silver
- Wireless chat (4 chat rooms)
- Backwards compatible with Gameboy Advance featuring slot in front
- Wireless LAN games
- 64-bit power
- Echoing sound effect
- 6 buttons including Start and Select
- Thumb strap – nice to keep the thumb prints off the screen with this thing.
- Don't know if it can emulate Gameboy Color games or not – the handheld has a AMG 7 and a AMG 9.
- Very compact. Handheld – a well designed handheld.
- Keeps time and date with alarm!
- Comes with head phone jack
- Comes with that jack for GBA link cable? Maybe GBA games can now be ran wireless if all people have a Dual Screen.

Have you ever noticed?

8-bit Gameboy 1989 - 2000

64-bit DS 2004 - future

128-bit Gameboy 2008?

Now I am going to get into November 25th. I usually write big events the day they happen, but I was tired and went to bed at 11PM. Yesterday began when I woke up around 9AM and then went to my aunts for Thanksgiving dinner. I threw the gird iron football (just football in America) to Jim (who is Michael's boyfriend) and we tossed the football back and forth before dinner. I can make good spirals believe it or not, but I keep dropping the ball once I catch it. Some of the throws Jim makes go over my head, I don't go for those. I'm not usually the athletic type, but I drove for one football. Yes! It slips out my hands. I had the usual turkey and stuffing. The stuffing by the way was terrible. I didn't say nothing – that would be mean if I have had done so. I have this Cousin Danny who I haven't meet for a long time (since May), and I tried talking about computers with him, but he ignored me at the table. I ate more than said anything. I went down in the basement to hook up my Xbox which I brought over in hopes of multiplayer. I also brought a hub and straight-through cable in hopes that Brian brought his Xbox over. I'm the only computer person there. Everyone doesn't find it fascinating. Ah...too bad. I fired up Guilty Gear X2 Reloaded on the old TV my Aunt and Uncle had. I love this game!!! I played this guy in red and won 12 duels in a role (there is two duels for each character unless the other character wins than there is three). It is one of those 2D fighters which there are no combos and you have to alternate and button mash your way through the levels. The opponent doesn't hit you as much when you're jumping and hitting X button three times and then the Y button. Y button does a forward slash. X button is a karate kick. A button does punches and B blocks. Brian was watching me who I wanted to play Halo 2, but he played upstairs.

I was actually the oldest gamer in the house. I was accompanied by three younger kids. I was playing slayer Halo 2 with them. I opened Halo 2 there with a nail. Halo 2 is awesome. I beat the little kids 4 – 1. Uli (Ulrike is his full name and it's a common girl's name in Germany....oops... it's all good...who would know?), and Lars (nickname for Lawrence) don't know how to throw plasma grenades. Hey, my name is popular in UK and Australia and my nickname is one letter, E. I asked Brian (who seemed to not pay any attention to the game) to play co-op with me. Co-op in Halo 2 is really fun. I died more times than him and this was on normal difficulty. We got to the part where the flood were attacking, and the aliens were using human weapons and vehicles for the first time. It's a very interesting story. There is a Halo on Earth (which is a doomsday weapon), and first we're sent to Australia oddly enough to do some fighting. I could tell because Master Chief flew down there from space after he disarmed a bomb just so he could arm it....rode it like a cowboy, and watch the mothership explode as he re-entered Earth's atmosphere, and landed in Australia. I'm surprised he didn't burn up in the process of re-entry. I know, I know it's a videogame and there are few rules. The grunts called me names as I killed him. The covenant is having problems with the flood like we Marines are. Brian is having fun with his dual SCGs! He's tearing up the place. I wonder if the humans are going to team up against the flood? The flood are those organisms that resurrect the dead after you kill them again and again. Halo 2 is heavily cut scene driven though which is cool – we watched all the cut-scenes. I must admit they have good graphics but the voice work needs a little work. Halo 2 has B movie rating in terms of acting. I'm not impressed with it at all. One problem with Halo 2 is the marines die too quickly, but not as nearly as quickly as the first game. The player gets reinforcements often in Halo 2. It makes me wonder exactly why there was a long line at Wal-mart the first day. Everyone wanted this game for some reason? Was it graphics or game play or both? Or is it because the Internet told them. Get this game – it's awesome without telling them why. Since it is a better game than most videogames this year, and it's coming to PC soon too that's enough reason to buy the Xbox version so the PC version will be that much more exciting when Bungie announces it. Once you find the secrets in Halo 2, then you play it online for free via PC, and it'll have better graphics than Halo 2 on the aging Xbox.

I brought Brian to my house so we could finish the game. I sold him Half-life 2, and he got me through the difficult part in the first level. I got shot by a helicopter gunner. He already saw me so I had no chance at escaping and died on the spot. Half-life is known for the famous red death screen. Brian was there so for long so we played Halo 2 once again. I offered him a Mountain Dew, but he rejected. We played for a good 3 hours when he left at 10:15. It was like when his brother came over a lot about a year ago. I'm seeing him this Christmas when he comes back from Japan. David isn't much of a gamer. His brother, Brian however, is... It's a lot of fun playing with someone who plays games on a regular basis like he does.

Last night I had a chance to play Halo 2 on the flat screen in the living room. It was really good. I was afraid of burn in, but I didn't happen. I realized that I could play Playstation and N64 on it with no problems long time ago. My brain kept telling me, "Must play Halo 2 on high resolution display" I have an older TV model in my room which I play my games on. I think I will again tonight. My week off is almost over – I can not believe it! Only 3 more days including today! Then I have to take a CCNA Cisco test on Tuesday. I dread it. I need to pass it the first time which is going to take some time aside from just normal reading IGN game reviews regularly or playing videogames. No longer can I be read the fascinating message boards at PS3insider. Lots of information on it. I could look at it for a day and not read everything on it.

I just want to say how PCs are better. They are more useful than any other platform and not just games – everything. It is the only console where online play is free. That's right – no paying 120 dollars a year for Xbox Live or Play Online! Plus, publishers always come out with good games for it. You won't see as many PC games as PS2 games, but at the same time – everything will work on it dating back to 1994. That's perfect! Although I'm starting to believe that discussing which platform is better is pointless. The PC can emulate consoles eventually. The PS2 emulator, PCSX2, seems to be showing great process. Soon we'll have the PC act as a common platform for many old consoles.

The long awaited Metal Gear Solid 3 - Snake Eater is out at last. Earlier today I walked into the River Falls ShopKo, and was looking for this game and I could not find it at first. I thoually searched for Metal Gear Solid 3. I found Ratchet and Clank Up Your Arsenal, and Jak 3, but no MGS3. I almost bought R &C Up Your Arsenal until I realized that ShopKo had it. I swear to God that somebody placed it there when I left the isle. So I drove 4 miles to Toyriffic which just opened because it was 11AM. I like to go there and see what games I HAVEN'T THOUGHT OF BUYING. I saw a Magnavox Odyssey at this store. I have seen pictures via surfing gaming sites, but not a real one up close, this is my first time. It was in fair condition, and I have an idea why no body bought it. It's really old, there probably isn't any selection of games along with it, and the graphics are monochrome. Gamecube's dropped down to $69.99 US, and as always the store has no PS2s available used. I hear the units keep breaking, and the DVD ROM drive is the first to fail. Mine has never failed on me.

The story is about the Cuban Missile Crisis! It starts when on October 08, 1962 a U2 Spy Plane unravels a MRBM missile silo in Cuba. A few days later there are US Spys in that location of Cuba and tell President Kennedy that is an advanced operation there. The US goes DEFCOM 1, and the President announces a speech to the world saying that any attack from Cuba is an attack of the Western Hemisphere, therefore, an attack from the Soviet Union. We immediately create a blockade surrounding Cuba. The U.N. tells the Premier Khrushchev too keep his ships out of Cuba, and supports the blockade of ships. On October 26, 1962, Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin knocks some sense into the US Defense department, and turns to ABC to have a live interview saying that war is going to break out between us and them. He acknowledges that if the US won't invade Cuba and declare Peace again, the Soviets will retreat. This must be where Metal Gear Solid 3 Snake Eater starts. Cuban Missile Crisis – Complicated. This makes no sense because the document said there was no commando force in Cuba during the "Cuban Missile Crisis" only undercover CIA agents. Why does this game's storyline exist? The main character isn't Solid Snake, but instead his fellow regiment commando, Big Boss. This is the 2nd most anticipated PS2 game of 2004. The first was San Andreas. The 3rd was Ratchet and Clank - Up Your Arsenal. Metal Gear Solid 3 is not as good as MGS 2 Sons of Liberty, but who cares - it's Metal Gear Solid, and that alone is enough to decide if it's worth it or not.

I guess I am cool now that I have the new Metal Gear Solid....because anything Metal Gear is cool. Did you know that Metal Gear was the name of the NES game published by Ultra Games in 1987? It starred Solid Snake.... Ultra Games came out with Metal Gear 2 in 1990. I have the ROM, and its game play is really out of date. Imagine a time when there was a D-pad and 2 buttons! That's not the point. The point is there was a Solid Snake 10 years prior to 1998 when Metal Gear Solid came out on PlayStation. It must be as old as Contra – because Contra is started on NES the same year I think. See, I only started playing games when I was 13, and that was 1997. I haven't played or owned a NES or SNES since I was invited over to David's house prior to 2003 when I bought a NES for myself. Still - I find nothing wrong playing the ROM version of Metal Gear.

New Games I am going to add to my VG list:

- MGS 3 Snake Eater
- Super Mario 64 DS
- Golden Sun

I tried out the new Mountain Dew called Mountain Dew Pitch Black. On a taste test I give it a 7/10 for good, but not as good as Mountain Dew Classic. It tastes like a grape jolly rancher! It tastes a bit mellower than Mountain Dew Classic. When you first taste it your taste buds get confused because it's a new taste, but if you drank 2 or 3 cans, your mouth gets used to the new taste, and I am starting to like it (that's the strange part). Pepsi gets rich off me! I spend roughly 384 dollars on soda per year. It comes down to white ratios leading to one twelve pack, and one six 24 ounce bottle pack every week. I don't like Mountain Dew Code Red, but I do like Mountain Dew Limewire a lot better. Surprisingly, Coca-Cola's main competitor not Pepsi directly, but Pepsi owned Mountain Dew. My advice is to pick up a bottle of Pitch Black for a buck, and try it out before the Limited Edition is not at covenant stores any longer!!!

Here's how I would rate it from best to least:

1. Mountain Dew Classic (Lime, Citrus) - 10/10
2. Coca-Cola Classic - 9.6/10
3. Mountain Dew Limewire (Orange Soda) - 9.0/10
4. A & W Rootbeer - 8.0/10
5. Mountain Dew Pitch Black (Grape Soda) - 7/10
6. Mountain Dew Code Red - 5/10

Randy Came Over!!! (2004-12-05 16:12)

Yesterday and today I posted a couple posts in Ian's Smashing Good Software Blog. I also updated my videogame post to version 1.18 SP1. Added those games I bought in the past 2 weeks. Yes, I added a few games too it including Splinter Cell and I have no idea why I missed that one. My friend Randy came over with his girlfriend. I wanted to show him my MP3 collection than Halo 2. He refused the play "Cooperation Mode" in single player so we played slayer. I think he got me twice, but I killed him a lot more. We didn't play soccer this time around. I showed him Guilty Gear X2 Reloaded and Dead or Alive Extreme Beach Volleyball. He thought that the Japanese chicks in Guilty Gear X were too dumb. It's kind of like an animated cartoon, and one character had a big thing with teeth come out of her butt - yeah, just too prove to you how strange this game is. Then he thought that Dead of Alive Extreme Beach Volleyball was all graphics. In his opinion, the graphics were really good, but the game played average. The first thing too do is hit the A button a lot than I hit the A button again to serve the ball only pressing the Y button to spike the ball. I kept winning. Afterwards, I played Metal Gear Solid 3, and I do play as Naked Snake (same guy who plays Solid Snake) at the beginning of the game. One time I fell of the ledge, the other time I was shooting an alligator and drowned in the quick sand. I spent most of my time looking for the damn backpack of Snakes so I went to the ledge to backtrack which is why I fell off! At the beginning, the game has live video of the code war and Cuban Missile Crisis. Then I opened Tony Hawk Pro Skater Underground. It played good I kept beating Randy in tricks and, no - I wasn't very good at getting them. The best way was staying around the ramps and pressing the X button a lot of times, and landing properly. I landed most of the time. I wasn't trying too pull off huge stunts all the time. Getting to 100,000 points took 25 minutes. I think Tony Hawk Pro Skater Underground had improved graphics over Tony Hawk Pro Skater 4. The game looked great for an Xbox game.

Today, I was looking at the message boards (mostly on a site I call Catharton Electrica) because that's what I like to do on Sundays plus drinking Mountain Dew. I found out that PS3's "Cell" chip might be over 4 GHz. It'll do multi-threading....what is that? We do not have any processors on the market over 3.4 GHz right now. Certainly PS3 will do the job that will last Sony for 5 or 6 years. PS2 certainly isn't going away very fast, and people still buy them regularly. It is interesting that people still buy technically outdated hardware which explains people do not care if they have extremely high resolution graphics like what high-end PCs can do. Games are the most important aspect of buying a console. I am sure if you type in "Playstation 3" into this blog's search bar that you'll get some entries on it.

Later - around 2PM - I went too Toyriffic to try to resurface Guilty Gear X because by PS2 wouldn't take it. I was waiting for the disc to be resurfaced for 20 minutes there. There was only one guy operating the whole store, and there was a line of people wanting to pay for their games. What's with Dungeon and Dragon cards these days? I am not into that sort of thing. Is it somehow cool? Well, anyway, the store operator said that I shall get a refund if the disc still didn't work due to a laser burning the disc all the way through. I got home to play it, and the disc didn't want to play. Sacrilege! How can it come too this? So I felt bad so I played Guilty Gear X3: Isuka when I got home. Isuka plays a lot like X2: Reloaded on Xbox. You can't really tell a difference in graphics. The PS2 controller has more buttons than the Xbox controller S therefore the set up gives you more options. I'll keep this short in saying this is really weird. An IGN reviewer said there was crazy cheese rock in this game. I know what Cheese rock sounds like. I look at Gamestop.com to see if there are any copies at the store, and I would have to travel 42 miles just to get a new used copy in West St. Paul, Minnesota. I thought well I could get lost in West St. Paul.

It's funny though, that Game Stop in the city has 4 copies of this particular game, but the other Game Stops have none!

I found some great updates audio codec I use:

LAME 3.97 beta 4

We all know that MP3 has taken over the web and is by far the most popular Audio codec..... Damn iPods! It's not the best lossy audio codec too use in terms of quality, but the more recent LAMEs have taken commercial quality audio to new levels. A 128 kbps MP3 encoded in LAME 3.96 or LAME 3.97 sounds as good as a newer WMA codec and OGG codec. LAME doesn't sound that great at low bit rates (16, 24, 32 kbps) . I leave that up too OGG and WMA. Still it's one of the best MP3 codec.

CDEX 3.51 Front End

Other LAME libraries (RAREWARE.ORG)

OGG Vorbis 1.1

Personally, I am using this codec for my personal audio files. It's not half bad and it is as compressed as any MP3. Yes, that's 990KB per Minute at 128 kbps. Only 460KB at 64kbps. It's a great codec, don't get me wrong. It's fastest with CDex. Surprisingly a voice conversation sounds as good at 32kbps as at 128 kbps. I shall not find any difference. That's progress for yeah. No worries about this codec being illegal - it's free and legal. Too bad hardware based MP3 players do not support OGG. If you had a audio test between this and LAME, Vorbis would win only by a small margin. With the soundcards in PCs today - you can hardly tell the difference anymore because the digital enhancement is so good.

CDEX 3.51 Front End

Other OGG Vorbis libraries (RAREWARE.ORG)

Hear my files at Ian's Videogame audio reviews

MPEG 4 AAC Audio

I've tested this codec and MPEG 4 files actually end with ACC instead of MP4 like I thought. It's compression is better than MP3 by a small margin. You're probably getting 100KB better with every minute of 128 kbps compressed audio. It is better. Okay how does it sound? It sounds okay - same as MP3. AAC audio isn't updated by Psytel any longer so MP3 surpassed AAC in quality a bit. Yes, the compression is better....only a little bit though.

Psytel AAC encoder 2.15 and Fast AAC encoder

CDEX 3.51 Front End

Other MPEG 4 AAC libraries (RAREWARE.ORG)

MUSE PACK 1.15 (NEAR CD Quality CODEC)

Muse pack is another LOSSYNESS (perfect sound) codec. This one is open source. In short a 140 kbps audio file compressed in MPC is as compressed as a 128 kbps MP3.

Winamp and Quintessential Player support both. This is an open source answer to MPEG 4 AAC audio. I don't suppose it's an issue with broadband users. Another thing is the file must be a WAV to for this too work, but that's okay since CDEX can make wav files for you.

Getting Satellite TV in my home office Friday! (2004-12-07 16:14)

Today, I found out that my early Christmas present will be an extra DirecTV receiver in my room and I am happy. Even though I plan to move out in 2 years, it gives me a lot of ideas about recording – I can record the video at 680x480 MPEG1 in real time onto my hard drive and compress the video I want in DivX for storage on my hard drive. It would require a TV tuner card – but having digital TV on my computer would be really great. My dad's getting a two new receivers and one is for my room. We already have all the regular channels plus HBO, Cinimax, Showtime, or The Movie Channel. I'm getting satellite channels in my room, and it's in ultra-high resolution so it's a big deal too me. It's better than streaming video! I am so excited. I get to record all Star Trek: The Next Generation episodes in medium resolution. Problem is it has to be MPEG1 or AVI because my computer can't encode video in MPEG2 or DIVx in real time. I can watch Modern Marvels on the History Channel, or Fox New Channel. I could end up recording 4 hours of video per day in AVI, and compressing them too smaller files at night when I am sleeping. This is going kick some serious butt!

I found some interesting pictures of next generation renders for consoles. One shows the best image of a Madden football game I've ever seen. This could be one that is using the Xenon power.

Anyways, at school - I had no class today. Joyce was gone so I was wondering it had anything with the fact that we're on the last chapter in the book and the test is due at the during Christmas Vacation. Cisco is damn difficult. Subnetting gives me the willies.

I found out what Jon Bon Jovi sounds like. I heard of him at school on Tuesday so I downloaded MP3 versions of his songs. Wow! He's pretty good. I downloaded his song "It's my Life" off Kazaa, and it's worth the download! His music is epic. I have 5 of them now. Before this I just know that his Winamp skin was really cool. It's like a big speaker moving with the sound waves. It's one of the top skins at Winamp.com. I read his BIO on MTV.com, and it says he dropped out of school to play in bands until he got a job as a janitor for his cousin's recording studio, and became popular in the 80s. Now, he is known through out the world and only does singles.

I am probably going to have to study for two tests tomorrow since Joyce wasn't in today. I was going to fail the class like a man. The truth is I am not doing very well.

I installed Suse 9.0 on my custom PC just for the heck of it. I have Linux, but I don't use it as often as Bill's OS. It's a fair OS and has less security holes than WinXP. I like that Bubble Trouble game on their. GIMP is nice too, but I leave the graphic effects to Paint Shop Pro 9. I have played around with the paint brush tool, and I sometimes use it for drawing with my mouse. That's pretty fun. I use the Windows version of The Gimp 2.0.4 – one of the latest versions. It's a great program understanding that it is free!

satellite tv service (2006-01-19 15:09:00)

Image Compression (2004-12-08 16:14)

Hi. I am back and this blog topic I've been working on for some time. You don't know how many blog that I've come across with bad graphic compression. For one it's none of my business what they do, but it is my business if I come to their site or not! See, if the compression is better – I might be happier with their site. Now, the easiest way too do this is Jasc's professional suite off it's trial page JASC, and try JPEG and PNG. I ruled out GIF because PNG is more compressed than GIF anyways. There is no reason too use GIF anymore. Screenshots can be tricky if it has few colors defiantly use PNG to compress them. If the graphic uses a lot of colors than I always use JPEG.

Done in Irfanview 3.95

PNG compressed in Irfanview (20K)

PNG compressed in Paint Shop Pro 9 giving example of it's JPEG dialog box (13K)

JPEG compressed in Irfanview (27K)

PNG compressed in Paint Shop Pro 9 giving example of it's PNG dialog box (13K)

1.) Keep the files at a low resolution. By low I mean nothing bigger than 600x600. I can not force you to go that small – but it's considered too be web safe under that amount. For pictures I advise nobody to go above 400x600 or 600x400. There is really no need for it. My cousin David doesn't understand the difference between GIF and JPEG and his graphics can get up between 800KB to 2 MB for a stupid graphic! So you see why it's important to know a little bit about compression.....

2.) Find a program that lets you reduce the Lossyness (quality) of your graphic. This is needed. The program I use is Irfanview because it has a fair JPEG codec with it. It's not bad, but it's probably not the best ever made either. Anyways, that's what I use, and I wish there were more people who use it like me but don't for whatever reason.

3.) A compress all my JPEG graphics at 50 % in Irfanview, (YCbCr 4x2 1x1 1x1 at 25 % - 30 %) with Paint Shop Pro 8.0 or 9.0. All my graphics are under 600x600!

4.) PNG compression is much trickier than JPEG because depending on the person – it's whether you want a lot of color or only 10 – 60 colors. For desktop screenshots I do about 30 colors. This graphic I did with PSP 9.0. It can be smaller depending on the resolution and also the number of colors. For monochrome I always do 3 or 4 colors. Monochrome does not look good with only 2 colors used! I found that out. The text is not readable when the color is set too 2.

 Heated discussion on Gameboy Advance 2 (the head of the site thinks Nintendo will not release another Gameboy)

Admin Here's been a lot of talk about whether the Nintendo DS is the true heir to the Game Boy Advance, or whether Nintendo might bring out a completely new Game Boy within the next couple of years.

What's your view? Let us know by voting and posting some reasons in this thread.

My personal position is that Nintendo would be crazy to release yet another handheld when they've only just launched the DS. It would be especially crazy as the DS has sold quite well and it would be silly to risk everything just because they wanted another console with the words "game boy" written on it.

RenegadeViking What's so crazy about it?

Just have a "Super Gameboy Advance" with two screens and make it 256-bit. Just because Dual Screen is called Dual Screen because it's two screens doesn't mean jack if the next Gameboy will have two screens or not. Maybe "Super Gameboy Advance will use Nintendo DS flash media and also have the Gameboy Advance slot like the DS for GBA games.

My point is maybe "Super Gameboy Advance" and DS Advance/ DS II are the exact same handheld.....

Admin how about we make jokes and call the Dual Screen "Gameboy DS" from now on. It'll make people a lot less confused.

Admin It'll confuse people! They'll think the DS is on the way out when it's only just been launched.

Renegade Viking Admin - aren't you are over reacting just a tad - Nintendo DS just came out 2 weeks ago here. I believe that Nintendo will support Nintendo DS for a good 4 years. That's 2004 - 2008. I bet you that the next handheld from Nintendo will play DS games. I don't think we need anything smaller than the DS flash media cartridges (they are easy enough to loose). If anything - Nintendo will probably release a successor to DS, not GBA. It's interesting that Nintendo will soon retire a popular brandname they've used since 1989. Who knows? Maybe we'll have a Gameboy Advance 2

I am pretty sure Nintendo's new handheld will skip 32 MB of video memory and go straight to 128 MB of video memory and 256 MB of EDRAM or maybe it'll have 128 MB of EDRAM and 64 MB (like Gamecube) of video memory just to reduce the price - this is a handheld, not a console. Either way - it's "over kill" for an handheld. So I suspect Nintendo is going to hook their Gameboy Advance 2 up to the TV and it'll look a lot like Gamecube games.

Admin "Admin - aren't you are over reacting just a tad - Nintendo DS just came out 2 weeks ago here."

Well, that was the reason why I thought it was crazy talk to suggest they're about to bring out another Game Boy Nothing serious...

"I believe that Nintendo will support Nintendo DS for a good 4 years. That's 2004 - 2008. I bet you that the next handheld from Nintendo will play DS games. I don't think we need anything smaller than the DS flash media cartridges (they are easy enough to loose). If anything - Nintendo will probably release a successor to DS, not GBA."

That's what I think, and a new handheld in 4 years time is fine.

I actually doubt the Game Boy brand will ever surface as a mainstream product again because Game = childish and Boy = childish so Game Boy = very very childish, which is exactly the image Nintendo is fighting at the moment.

"It's interesting that Nintendo will soon retire a popular brandname they've used since 1989. Who knows? Maybe we'll have a Gameboy Advance 2"

If it does come back, and it is one of the most popular and famous brands ever in the games world, it might be in the form of a product aimed specifically at kids the way the original Game Boys were. That's 100 % speculation by me though. It could also just be a DS in a "special Game Boy edition", like there was a GBA that was a "special NES / Famicom edition".

"Either way - it's "over kill" for an handheld."

Now that they've gone 3D, I think there's going to be a lot of overdeveloped games with special effects you can barely appreciate on the portable format. Gameplay has to be more flexible on a portable because you sometimes only get short bursts of time to play it in.

"So I suspect Nintendo is going to hook their Gameboy Advance 2 up to the TV and it'll look a lot like Gamecube games."

Sony makes TVs, what do you think the betting is that they'll do one that you can link PSPs to wirelessly?

Had Daytona USA emulation working on my Pentium 4 (2004-12-11 16:15)

Final Fantasy fanatics are silly on the forums of the Unofficial Final Fantasy Site! I mean talking about those silly above average Final Fantasy fan-made art in the signature boxes. I can make one like those, but it'd be too silly to do so! It has everything to do with that silly Square-soft art direction! So I went to this site to read about the old Final Fantasies, and I go in the message board and like many other fan sites of this particular franchise – you'll be loading 200K worth of fan-made graphics. All I need is the correct font, desktop wallpaper, and use of the magic wand in Paint Shop Pro 9.

My profession is going down the toilet. Yes, you have heard right – school is an utter disaster. I may switch to programming in January. Programming has those fields where all that matters is the code. If your program is buggy than the source code is always the problem, but always the solution to the problem. I also over-heard programmers are more likely to have an interesting in videogames or PC games in general than network specialists. The programming class was the one that set up the Xbox LAN party at the school I go too. The most popular computer language is Visual Basic, which is basically a Win32 graphical user interface that let's me, the programmer, click on the object in question and insert source code. C++ is 10 years old, and C source code is over 25 yrs old so most people prefer Perl code because it's newer and less complicated. Programming today is very similar to a webpage developed in Macromedia Dreamweaver or Namo Webeditor by making the program as big as I like by resizing the default perimeters of it, and placing the buttons and text boxes where I like them before I insert code. I believe there is a VB compiler, and an open source alternative compiler called GTK 2x which runs on Glib runtime libraries. These programs compiled in GTK require you to download the Glib executable onto your computer. A great example is the Windows version of The GIMP 2.0.5. I wonder if 'G' stands for Gnome? Perhaps the developers of Gnome made this free runtime library for Windows? It's funny too realize that anyone can make open source VB source code, and it's legal! Visual Basic is made by Microsoft so this should mean that source code created by it is closed source which is not the case. It must be one of those Microsoft loop-holes.

Screenshots of the SSF emulating Daytona USA on my PC

I tried out the latest version of SSF - SSF 0.07 RC11, and this version improved - it now runs Daytona USA on my Dell Dimension XPS Pentium 4 machine partially emulated. In its day, Saturn was a complex console to develop for, and now somebody in Japan successfully emulated it on PC. This isn't new news at all - I own about this emulator for 6 months. In fact, I have a post on my last attempt to emulate Daytona USA! Unfortunately, my other Saturn games give me errors messages when I try to boot them. There is an available link on the side of this site to test on your computer. Maybe future releases will emulate sound. Some reasons why Saturn isn't emulated as well as Playstation is the fact that nobody likes it. Still, it's pretty amazing when this Japanese programmer had zero source code to start with and he's emulating it for FREE! That means in his spare time he has been able to software emulate the most complex console ever made up until 1998. Yes, Saturn is harder than the Nintendo 64 to develop software for. Daytona isn't playable, but it proves that some day it might be. There are a lot of textures missing in the game though. One day when I feel I have too - I'll resurface all my Saturn games and make them brand spanking new. It's about $3.50 per disc. It's steep for a resurfacing job, but it's worth it if the CD doesn't work. They all do so it's not a top priority of mine.

Yesterday, I bought two more PS2 games, Jak 3 and Ratchet and Clank Up Your Arsenal. I was reading the reviews at IGN.com and the reviewers were ecstatic about both games. They gave both games 9.6 of 10 as high as Metal Gear Solid 2 or even Final Fantasy X. Obviously, no body gives a game 9.6 for a game unless it's the top 2 % on the system. So since the score was unbelievably high - being smart, I looked around at other reviews including Game Rankings (a site that takes all final scores of 10 different well known gaming sites, adds them together, and divides by 2). The winner of this was Ratchet and Clank 3 and ahead by a full 6 points! Yes, that's right - Jak 3, instead of having very high score of 9.6....now has an averaged score of 9.0. So I was going to buy 1 game, but since I liked Jak 2, I bought both of them for $85. The graphics are one of the high points of both games since both use the same graphics engine and are some of the best graphics PS2 can muster. The only ones ranked above Jak 3 and Ratchet and Clank in texture work are the Grand Theft Autos and the Metal Gear Solids. Jak 3 and R & C3 have succeeded in better texturing than Jak 2 or R & C2 Going Commando. In the end, I personally thought that this was enough reason to buy each game at 40 dollars. Some people may disagree with me, but I heavily rely on well-known cyber-review sites before I buy. I never rent games. Not to mention Jak 3 is the final installment in the Jak series and Ratchet and Clank 3 is the final installment in the Ratchet and Clank series. Naughty Dog Software and Insomniac Software plan to develop future action platform games on the Playstation 3 that are just as good as the their current offerings.

Remember it was Naughty Dog who brought Playstation its first mascot in 1996 - Crash Bandicoot, and sold millions of copies here in the USA. This was until 2000 when Naughty Dog had to give it up to Traveler's Tales, a UK developer which also developed Sonic 3D Blast for the Genesis, Saturn, and PC! Sonic 3D Blast was not very good at all. Where do you think that put the well-known mascot? Two words.... Multi-platform. Yes, the dreaded two words that will make any developer want to sue Sony Computer Entertainment America! But anyways, Naughty Dog platformers are the best platformers out for the console unlike its ex-mascot's newest installments. I read that Crash Twinsanity is a bit above average for a videogame and also the first Crash Bandicoot videogame to rotate 360°, but stands no where near the quality of Jak and Dexter which you've guessed it - already rotates 360° and are on their 3rd game of the Jak franchise. I am pretty sure this is true having myself played the first two installments. I played the first game to the end.

[Jak 3 Update] I open the game and put the DVD into my PS2 and it starts with a 5 minute long intro that connects Jak 2 with Jak 3. The game looks like a damn Gamecube title which does this game a whole not of justice. When I start out I am thrown into a wasteland (I didn't complete Jak 2 so I don't know how it came too this). I was left out too die in the desert when I was rescued by some drifters (also having pointy ears like Jak) when I wake up in the new city. I have to go through this tutorial part where it teaches all the basic moves that jak does (Dexter doesn't play a commanding role in this game). Dexter was transformed into a muskrat when he fell into a pool of dark ego. The control is very tight - what you would expect from Jak 2. In fact, Naughty Dog most likely imported the gameplay code from the first Jak and Dexter into Jak 3. I am in the part where I completed the first mini-game of the game. The first mini-game of Jak 3 is a timing game which requires the player too hit the four dual shock controller buttons at the precise moment when the Xs, squares, triangles and circles pass over 4 little squares. The whole point of it is to destroy 100 of them moving shapes without allowing them to pass the squares. It took me three times to get it right.

One day I dream I'll be a great videogame reviewer! One with the skills and have many supporters. You know how it is - buy games, play games, review games, buy more games, play more games, review more games. Does this sound interesting to you? I used to be a big-time videogame reviewer, now I am an ex-videogame reviewer. It gives me a perfect sense of what's good and what's bad in terms of videogames. A good game is when you don't die too much and the game's controls are easy to control. A bad is simply way too easy or way too hard. It's way too hard because most of the time - the game is poorly funded and the developers didn't tweak the control enough and the graphics are horrible because it runs on a middle-ware graphics engine like that popular Render-ware or the designers who made the game spent 6 months with limited knowledge about the hardware so the graphics within the game stunk. Did you know that Gamespot has an award system that awards "The Worst game of the Year!" for every platform? Gamespot had one which is so bad it got all 1.0s and that accomplishment goes to "Big Rigs: Over the Road Racing" for PC.

Tomorrow is the last day of school before Christmas Vacation. In Human Relations I have gotten a 95 % on my success journal - my highest grade in the whole class. Tomorrow is my conversation with the school which will determine where I'll be next year in terms of classes. Pretty basic I think. Anyways, it will be interesting what the teachers will say about me. I am in fact a registered student of the school and shall be there very day even if this means I will have to do Cisco over again. The problem is there will be new students in the next semester thus I will not be able to befriend any body I met in this class. For example, I was invited to a PC LAN party at school this Thursday, where all the Cisco class will get together and play Halo (PC version) or UT2004, or Diablo 2 and have a good time. Well these good times will not last. Problem is I do not know these students well, and while I haven't got mad at them for knowing more than I do in networking, they do know I am not very talented when it comes to networking. I am one of those people who aren't in love with old games. With the exception of Halo 2 for Xbox, the LAN party may be playing old games, which is not my preference. My point is I hope I have a good time fragging everyone hopefully without too much profanity.

My newest game is Growlancer Generations for PS2. It is a RPG from Japan and the anime on the cover is a dead giveaway that unless you're into Anime in general - most people will not buy this particular game. If you look past the anime aspect, you get a well made RPG made by Game Arts who also makes Grandia. Growlancer is one of those games that keeps the oldschool look of games - and only uses 3D for effect. I haven't opened it yet.

Merry Christmas (2004-12-27 05:41)

Merry Christmas once again. I said this once before exactly 1 year ago too. I am hoping I'm getting some sort of fancy flat-screen TV for consoles. I don't know yet - that's what's so exciting about today.

Here is the entry that was never published due to Modblog's server change. I didn't have the patience and made a new blog at my Blogspot site. That site is basically a replica of this site. I was worried that Modblog wouldn't be online so I went to plan B. Now, that Modblog is back online, there is no need to update it.

I found out that the only Windows NT clone is 100 % functional! Yes, you can copy Windows NT 4.0 CDs, but this is different – this is an operating system able to read Windows applications and games without Windows running it. Some people call “ReactOS” a Windows clone because it does or will do everything that Windows 98 does, though completely programmed under the GNU Project. This eliminates any possible stolen Windows code. The programmers shown they already got Quake 2 to be playable on React 0.2.8 proven by screen shots off ReactOS official page. This is not an emulator – it is either a partition-based or LiveCD-based OS for your computer. ReactOS has a great DOS emulator from what I read off the net. GPU also constructed an open source emulator compatible with MS-DOS software. There are other 3rd party DOS emulators - the most popular is DOSemu for Linux. Another was FreeDOS which is programmed by a University of Wisconsin, River Falls graduate, Jim Hall and works on Windows and Linux. The name doesn't sound familiar, but I've worked at the UofW as a part-time tech intern through high school. I had to explain how to convert Quicktime to MPEG2 and burn it to a “NTSC compatible DVD” in a “do-it-yourself” booklet complete with pictures.

On the official page, ReactOS was the successor of the failed FREEWin95. Something happened to FreeWin95, and it could not see its first release. Two years later, ReactOS was released publicly. Nothing ran right, and it was basically a dysfunctional build for the curious I believe and testing stages of the program. ReactOS got some of its source code from OS2, Sun's JAVA, and open source DOS emulators - all legal.

I suspect since it's a Windows clone – you can install Direct X 9.0a onto the system directory, and it'll run PC games. Direct X is the Microsoft software accelerator for and all PC games out are compatible with it. It's 3 times better than OpenGL. While OpenGL runs decent on Windows, I have had a hard time running games on OpenGL through Linux.

A Windows Explorer clone called GNU Midnight Commander is used in it. Midnight Commander looks exactly like Windows 2000's Explorer and functions similar I am guessing. Since I use Windows as part as daily life – it is safe to say I know how it functions.

ReactOS has first got used on the Xbox. With ReactOS on Xbox, gamers can probably surf the Internet now, use the world processor or play some older PC games.

I read the NewsForge review on ReactOS, and the author said while it came with minimal software, IBM-DOS/MS-DOS is fully emulated in ReactOS, and all the commands work as well as Window's Command Prompt from what I've read. I thought this was an interesting point he made. A Windows clone wouldn't be complete without a terminal and that's the truth.

Anyways, I have yet to download it – the best chance I'll have of downloading the huge file is at school when next semester starts on January 14th. I'm going to try either the hard drive version or the Live CD version. The partition version will load faster and I could try to run older games on it. The Live CD is good because it can run itself on any computer without changing the existing file system on the hard drive. Just think about it for a minute.....in the near future, Microsoft's main competition could be an OS compatible with it's own software. If you can't beat them – join them and the metaphor certainly applies to operating systems.

On December 22nd, I came up with different concept for my page, “Ian's Quintessential Blog 3.0.0” The new template went online later that day. The site is fully redesigned for better or for worst. As soon as I get all the monthly entries on each page – that annoying mini window will disappear. I have the gallery, design, and all the blog entries working although it's frustrated to see that some browsers don't know how to word-wrap! It took me four hours yesterday and two hours today to complete the first fully functional template. Sorry, the waterfall background with Cloud Strife from Final Fantasy VII is the best I can come up with.

Ian's Quintessential Blog 3.0

Yesterday, I wanted to buy some more games to play. I got a deal on Metroid Fusion and bought Prince of Persia - Warrior Within new (a darker sequel to Prince of Persia Sands of Time). So I was playing Metroid Fusion from 1AM to 5AM this morning. It was more fun than I thought. It improves on Super Metroid game play. I know because I played the ROM. On the Gameboy Player, it gives Metroid a better look than Super Metroid. With the screen stretching on TV, I thought it would look awful, but surprisingly it's similar to any 2D shooter on Playstation. After I write this entry - I'll go back to completing it. The other game I'm playing is Phantasy Star IV on Gens with a controller. Gens smoothed the graphics out a lot so any game emulates better on a computer screen. Phantasy Star IV is getting interesting, and I am planning to play it to the end. The game takes place 1000s year after an advanced culture was completely destroyed by war. All left behind was a "Mother-Brain" life support system on the planet. The advantage of playing this game on an emulator is the quick-saves. In the action-time battle sequences, I can save the game when it's my turn to attack the enemy in the battle and prevent any deaths. It basically keeps my party immortal and saves a lot of time. Currently the planet's progress is creeping around 1450 - 1500 AD. Lately, the life support system has been acting up since it's 1000s of years old, therefore, the primary plot is to rescue an android from a madman to shut down all the dysfunctional life support systems before they completely destroy the planet by producing harmful genetically engineered life forms. The graphics are worst than most SNES role playing games, but above average in terms of Genesis RPGs. Strangely, this story line is similar to Final Fantasy X....

New games to add to my list:

Phantasy Star II

Phantasy Star III

Prince of Persia - The Warrior Within

Metroid Fusion

Enjoying my new TV (2004-12-28 16:07)

My parents gift-wrapped me an Insignia 25" LCD TV and I can use that for gaming. The TV can do picture within picture like a virtual thing, has a monitor output, S-video inputs, and is a really thin TV. I got it hooked up by myself, and was playing Dead or Alive 2 on it on Christmas. Star Wars – A New Hope looks a little pixilated, it's not the TV's fault, it's the quality of the MPEG2 compression, and I am anxiously waiting for Blu-ray (the next generation) to come out.

Specs of Insignia 25" Widescreen HD-Ready Flat-Panel LCD TV Speculations: Screen size - 25"

Aspect Ratio 16.9

Display Type LCD

Digitally Compatible Yes, HDTV ready

Pixels 1280x760 (1.15 Gigapixels)

Contrast Ratio 600:1

Brightness 450 cd/m²

All supported Picture in Picture, S-Video input, composite video input, RGB input, 5 Watt speakers, 2 speakers, V-Chip

My old TV was decent in 1996. The older Sanyo was an analog only 19" TV that served countless usage on N64 and Dreamcast or watching movies. I almost passionately attached too it, but I'll have two TVs when I move out in a couple years. Perhaps, I can use one in my bedroom, and the other in the living room?

My parents gave me a DVD player too which is able to play NTSC & PAL DVDs, MPEG, JPEG, GIF, PNG, MP3 CDR or DVDRs. Other stuff my parents gave me for Christmas was a 50 pack of CDRs, 50 pack of DVDRs, Spiderman 2, Star Wars Trilogy, Lady Killers, Bourne Supremacy, Dead or Alive Ultimate for Xbox, and a Samsung cellular phone. My parents also bought a professional scanner for themselves which does excellent picture or document scans. It's possible to scan b/w text with crystal clear results. The software allows the picture to be compressed in PNG, JPEG, GIF, BMP or storage, or MS PowerPoint formats.

The Samsung SCH-a650 has AOL Instant Messenger, E-mail with pictures, caller ID, color LCD. It's a basic cell phone I know.

The SCH-a650 can broadcast digital signals, lasts 24 hours on standby, 1.5 hours of talk time, and can fully charge in 3 hours time. I don't know what I shall use it for?

I had nothing better to do so I drove to Toyriffic in Hudson, WI to buy some games yesterday including Crimson Skies which was on my list. It's like a 1930s film. Return to Castle Wolfenstein, a World War II first person shooter originally developed at ID Software, and I got Star Wars - Star Fighter for only - get this - $5.

Hi, you almost lost me for one second there... but I'm glad I didn't click away. First, I enjoyed your post, and second, maybe you can help. I don't know how much blog spam you get but I get tons on my blog. Most of the time I'm talking about surf dvds because I have a surf dvds website, and people post all this junk with their links and stuff. As blog owners, I guess we'll always be subject to the unethical and inconsiderate. Well, hopefully it's not driving you to crazy... Good luck partner, enjoy the positives friend.

Conditions of Videogame consoles and peripherals

NES:

1. Condition - 7.5 / 10 (shows no abuse, but showing it's age from consent use, problem with getting TV lines after 30 minutes of play)
2. Two first party Nintendo controllers condition 8/10 | a little worn for being heavy played by previous owner | no abuse though

SNES

1. Console Condition 8.5/10 (bought used, no abuse, on TV lines)
2. one first party SNES controller | condition 8.0/10
3. one 2nd party SNES controller from Interact start button sticks which means it's almost unplayable | condition 4/10
4. one 2nd party SNES controller from Yabo | condition 9/10 (bought new)

Genesis

- 1.) Console Condition 8.5.10 (bought used, no abuse, no TV lines)
- 2.) controller 8.0 (plays okay, but showing scratches, but perfect condition, but better than average)

Nintendo 64

1. Console condition 7/10 (bought used) works nicely. Condition 7/10 Never freezes
2. Original grey N64 controller that came with console condition 6.5/10 (left trigger sticks and joystick loose) still operational

3. First party blue N64 controller | condition 8.5/10 works well
4. First party green controller | condition 8.0/10 works well
5. 2nd party memory card condition 8.5/10 still works like it was new
6. Madcatz controller for N64 9/10 | used as 2nd player controller | shows no abuse, but feels wore in
- 7.) 2nd N64 8/10 | not drawn on and plays fine and looks like it was purchased in 2000. I doubt it was played often. Only costed $20!

PSone

1. Console condition 9.6 out of 10, practically brand new (no abuse, no loading problems)
2. First party PSone controller condition 9.0 out of 10 (no abuse)
3. 2nd party PSone controller condition 9.5 out of 10 (used less than 10 times)
4. Memory card

Saturn

1. Console 1 from Gamestop condition 8.0/10
2. Console 2 from Toyriific condition 8.0/10
3. First party controller condition 7.0/10 (shows little abuse, not by me though)
4. 3rd party controller condition 8.5/10 (shows that it's been used, but no abuse)
5. 2 Analog first party controllers 10/10 (never been used, bought new at Toyriific)

Dreamcast

1. Original DC bought new in 1999 | 7/10 skips a lot for consent use, no abuse whatsoever, still runs all games very well without freezing
2. 2nd DC bought used in 2004 | 9/10 looks like it had no abuse, works very well, never froze and I don't use this one
3. 3rd DC bought in 2001 | actually the only console that I've never opened, brand new with new console and controller | condition 10/10
4. Original controller 6/10 | little abuse, joystick awkwardly leans to the left, triggers stick
5. Another sega controller 7/10 | no abuse | some scratches
6. Yet another Sega Controller 8/10 | joystick a little worn in, no abuse, shows scratches
7. Madcatz 3rd party controller 6/10 | used as a player 2 controller | triggers stick and joystick sticks sometimes Shows scratches
8. All memory cards condition are 9.5/10. All showing little scratches, but that's it. No dings

Gamecube

1. Console condition 9/10 | plays like it was new, looks new practically
2. First party controller that came with system (black) 7/10 | joystick sticks, A button sticks
3. 2nd first party controller (purple) 9/10 very well taken care of | shows some scratches though
4. Matcatz controller (purple) 8/10 very well taken care of
5. memory cards - condition - 9.0 out of 10 looks brand new
- 6.) Gameboy Player - condition 9.0/10 - previous owner took care of it. It looks like it was attached to the gamecube the entire time he/she had it. A small scratch on the top of the peripheral.

Playstation 2

1. condition 7/10 Shows no abuse but very worn in by it's previous owner, has a slight problem playing DVDs movies, but plays games very well
2. original controller 8/10 worn in a lot, little abuse
3. 2nd Sony Dual Shock II (blue) 9/10 a little worn, no abuse, joystick still very stiff showing little use
4. memory card 9.5 out of 10 (looks brand new)

PStwo or Playstation 2 Slim

9.8/10 used once

Xbox

1. Console condition 9.0/10 | works very well and no abuse | previous owner took very good care of it and that's good for me
2. Xbox controller that came with system 8.5/10 | little worn, small scratches, plays very well, no problems, rumble works

3. Another Xbox controller 8.5/10 I bought used from Toyriffic, again little worn, small scratches, looks very good

The Tiger Telematic's Gizmondo (2005-01-02 10:22)

I've never heard of this new handheld from Tiger Telematics, the Gizmondo. The Gizmondo will be more powerful than Nintendo DS, but less powerful than PSP. The NDS has a 67 MHz ARM9, and the Gizmondo will have a 400 MHz ARM9. Tiger Telematics is not affiliated with Tiger Electronics which had released Game.com. The handheld is overpriced, about $350 compared to the $150 Dual Screen, and $150 PSP when it launches in March. Everyone's getting a PSP as will I.

Tiger Telematics managed to add Windows CE operating system. WinCE will give the handheld a media player with MPEG4 and MP3 support, a global positioning system (GPS) with navigation, and the Internet. With this package, there is multiplayer via Bluetooth (wireless) or Internet via cell technology, a graphics processing unit more powerful than Dual Screens, but less than average software at launch. It doesn't look like too many big publishers are supporting it.

I don't like other handhelds other than Gameboys or DSes, but I am having confidence that Playstation Pocket will have its own great games. The PSP will support a 400 MHz CPU too. In terms of handheld software, I own eight Gameboy Advance games, and one Dual Screen game. In short, why shall I invest in a Gizmondo when Playstation Pocket has more developer support while asking for less?

As for the two day silence, I had invited a friend over. Randy and I played Winning Eleven 6 International where I won against him by a foul goal that hit the inside rim of the goal post, and won the game 1 - 0. Then Randy did a cheap shot by running the ball in the goal in 2nd half, and won the game 0 - 1. The game of the moment was Mortal Kombat: Deadly Alliance. I kept winning against him with my superior reaction skills, but it was a great bloody experience - I mean that. Bob has MK: Deadly Alliance for PS2, and is amongst his favorites. Of course, he and I never talk to each other. Randy had got off from work at 3PM where normally he got off work at 11PM which made his visit possible. He liked my TV.

The day ended with us playing Return to Castle Wolfenstein - Tides of War on Xbox. He doesn't like Halo, but he does like killing Nazis. Well, I offered him a whole DVDR worth of MP3s, he said, "No" to that. If my hard drive is equal to 2 single layer DVDs than he could have had owned half of my collection. O-well. It's his loss.

2005: The Highly Anticipated Videogames (2005-01-05 14:41)

I'll name the top six videogames I'm excited to get this year:

Xenosaga Episode 2 - Xenosaga part 2 launches February 15th. This space RPG is a prequel saga to Xenogears. This game is suppose to look better than previous RPGs on PS2 before it. There has never been a game with as many cutscenes as Xenosaga. The last episode takes place after humans go to war with an alien species (again). Humans have conquered space and the Gnosis stand in their way. The Gnosis want a monolith known as an Zohar which looks exactly like the one at the end of the movie, 2010. At the beginning, the aliens took the Zohar emulator mistaking it for the real monolith hidden from everyone. Humans were able to unlock some alien technology from Zohar, but not all of it, which why it is a quest for the Holy Grail. Fortunately, Earth scientists have created an android called KOS-MOS inferior to the enemy unlike humans are. KOS-MOS is a first prototype of a whole army of KOS-MOSs to defend the Earth Federation against the Gnosis. The game makes you go to different planets to rescue androids. The party isn't entirely human - about 2/3s android - they only look the same as us. In battle sequences, the game allows 3 players, and you have your 3 different attacks, several special attacks and my favorite - MECHs, the game calls them (A)nti (G)nosis (W)eapon (S)ystems instead.

Resident Evil 4 - I forgot about this one so I had to add it. Resident Evil 4 puts you in the eyes of Resident Evil 2 hero, Leon Kennedy.

After the fall of the Umbrella Corporation only a year before, he goes to a European town to investigate there. Leon finds out the villagers are trying to kill him not to mention the T-virus as infected villagers, and sometimes created T-virus monsters. The question is why it is here and not only Raccoon City or that place in Code Veronica? It's your favorite horror survival game onto its eighth chapter.

The game really does push Gamecube graphics to the limit!

IGN gave it a 9.8, the highest score for a Gamecube game for them. The adventure is supposed to last 20 hours. The game is made by Capcom Production Studio 4.

Suikoden IV - Also called Gensou Suikoden IV in Japan coming out in 7 days. This weird renaissance turn-based RPG seems to take after the events of Suikoden III, supposedly 2002 Role Playing Game of the Year by IGN. I bought Suikoden for Playstation, a very rare Playstation game which is why it's as much as a new PS2 game. I suspect Konami made Suikoden III much like Final Fantasy X, added a 3D engine, more audio driven cut-scenes, and an above average 'turn-based battle thing'. Yes, another anime-based RPG importing from Japan the US seems to get six or more of these on PS2 each year.

Dungeon Siege 2 - It's another RPG, but for PC developed by Gas Powered Games, a new game developer under Microsoft's reign. The first game supported a very advanced engine for 2001, but not very good looking in 2005. Dungeon Siege is a dungeon-crawler like Forgotten Realms series or Diablo. Basically, it's a 3D Diablo-like hack & slash PC game. The sequel is larger, has more weapons and armor, an upgraded engine also used in the original with much better textures, improved mod support. It looks cool and suppose to be as good as Neverwinter Nights. I used to be big on played Dungeon Siege in 2001 when it came out.

Super Mario 128 - A true sequel to Super Mario 64 unlike Super Mario Sunshine. The game will be presented at E3 2005 for Gamecube. I do know it'll look better than Super Mario Sunshine texture wise! One of the faults of that game was the low resolution textures, but the characters and game engine were high resolution.

Knights of the Old Republic 2: Revenge of the Siths - This Star Wars game is the sequel to Bioware's unbelievable action-RPG. Around now, the Jedi have decreased in numbers by a large margin, and the old republic is at the blink of war. The Xbox version is already out, but the PC version is suppose use the same hack and slash method as the prequel. KotOR looked great at 1600x1200, and got above 9.2 on practically every review site on the Internet. The graphics generally were above 9.0. Sound was about a 9.5. Game play was always above 9.0, replay value was either an 8.5 to 9.5 depending on the reviewer. KotOR2 allows you to pick the Old Republic's fate.

At Toyriffic yesterday, I met a black man there at the store. He asked me about the game I bought. Then he asked me why I bought it. I didn't answer him, I'd never seen him in my life.

It was very cold yesterday, around freezing so I was wearing fleece under a heavy winter coat so I was very warm out in the cold. The same day, I went too visit a consoler in Minneapolis, who asked me several questions. Anyhow, I hated my visit there, and I'm not coming back.

On New Years, I had all my younger cousins over including Joshua who's in 9th grade. What a pain, they wanted to borrow my videogames to take home with them. I said, "No." Lars knows it's free - that's why! He's just a little guy though - mean not what he says. I buy the games, they take it home for free? - sorry. I want all my games behind glass now.

Anyways, I wanted to show Josh, the oldest one, my favorite videogames out of the collection. Uli is also mature for his age, not as mature as I though, but I do agree with him that Halo and Fable are great games since he kept commenting on how great Fable was. I wonder why Fable was rated M anyways?

Joshua wanted to see Soul Reaver - Legacy of Kain 2, and he played that for a while. I also showed my cousin, Sherry (his mom) Fatal Frame 2 - Crimson Butterfly since she's into videogames as well. Last time I saw Sherry was on Halloween. Joshua kept calling me crazy because of all the games on my shelves. It's not crazy.... just a little obsession....that's all. He likes Bran Stroker's Dracula & Matrix Revolutions so he watched both. I tried to get someone interested in watching Saving Private Ryan, but no one cared. Don't these kids want to watch a reenactment of the greatest generation? The same generation that destroyed The 3rd Reign? I must mention the Brits, Canadians, Russians, and Free French who made victory possible, otherwise - my comment would be very one-sided which isn't true. The film glorifies war too, lots and lots of gore from the D-Day scene (June 06, 1944) on Normandy Beach or other invaded beaches in German occupied France. Those who watched the film would know! If those kids can play Halo 2 you start to wonder why videogames are more important than our country's history. 1.) None of my cousins like History Class. 2.) None of my cousins seen so many videogames in their life. 3.) Both.

Today, I was also playing with the hero maker, the idea just dawned on me that there would be such a thing on Google. I was right and the third hit was the best version. I thought, "Wonderful!" The program does weapons, cloaks, 6 different shields, 4 different kinds of bikini mails for female, 6 different faces too choose from, and 30 different skins for each gender. The program allows you to pick from basketball cheerleader, female fantasy warrior or male knight. Hero Maker Homepage

I'm questioning what would lead to the excess weight achieve on Zoloft or other SSRIs? Someone close to me just began using it and was experiencing nausea as a regular facet impact. Carbs were the only issue that might settle his abdomen, so he was consuming much more carbs. Stuff like that could cause excess weight achieve. Luckily, the nausea seems to possess mostly dissipated at this time, soon after two months of so of taking Zoloft.

A couple of years ago I went on the drug that didn't record fat gain being a side impact but it produced me really feel so unwell that i also overate carbs to compensate and gained a bunch of weight.

Or is it like the energizer bunny commenter over who stated she gained and does not consume significantly, so perhaps it's a metabolism point that is certainly impartial of eating habits?

I imply.. melancholy itself can cause many people to overeat and a few people to shed their urge for food.

Some folks with IBS who have not been capable to consume considerably might be having zoloft for the offlabel benefit of settling their irritable bowels down, and could feel safer consuming more and likely out much more to consume.

I can also imagine someone who isolated because of their melancholy likely out and socializing and for that reason consuming more. I actually want we experienced more info about what could be the cause on the weight achieve (or loss in some cases.)

Is it a modify in habits or simply an impartial metabolic side effect?

Lisa... The information you've on here is great. I started blogging a number of many years ago and I've a modest pursuing.

I have noticed that recently many people have been emailing me asking me what I charge per day to advertise on my weblog.

You carry up some fantastic points. Most notably...

That each internet site is different and though I would really like to charge a specific amount..I might either be charging to higher or charging to reduced. I definitely wish to communicate smartly when I delve into this region.

In addition to earning funds from the site I'd also like to check merchandise and blog about them.

Thanks to Modblog's Administrator, Gorman, who was nice enough to make a screenshot [PRINT SCREEN -> Clipboard] of W.Bloggar's account dialog box so I knew what the heck I was doing when I imported my Modblog account to it. I added his screenshot to my server for everyone to view. The screenshot was very helpful to me. Thanks Stuff5 for letting me know this program exists. It will never replace the good old fashioned "Add Blog Entry" on the website itself, but that's my opinion.

copy these settings in W.Bloggar's Settings Dialog Box to post online

I originally was getting Resident Evil 4, and I should stay with my first choice. I believe I'll buy it for $50 since I can always make up the $50 in two months. Playstation Pocket is retailing for $150 in March. You'll have to read my next post to see what could happen in the future. I might have to discipline myself after I get Resident Evil 4. The graphics in Resident Evil 4 look as good as Metroid Prime 2 Echoes. The textures are better than Resident Evil Zero which was known for its extremely good horrifying textures amongst Gamecube owners.

IGN.com gave the game a 9.8/10. They have a list of highest ranked videogames and Resident Evil is ranked 4 or 5 at Gamestats.com. I read off the review that Resident Evil is twice as hard as Resident Evil Zero. That might be a problem, but I'll still buy it because a lot of game review sites are saying it is the best Resident Evil ever made. I know I agree with that part.

Games to add to v1.20 videogame list:

- Ace Combat 5 (PS2)

- Suikoden
(PS)

- Grandia 2 (PS2)

I found the Gamecube extended hardware review entertaining. One thing that caught my eye was the Flipper would have had 128 MB of (G)raphics (P)rocessing (U)nit DDR S-DRAM if ArtX was absorbed into ATI sooner. ArtX could only offer Nintendo 64-MB in the Flipper graphics chip. If anything, Gamecube is still more advance than PS2. I didn't know Gamecube used 24MB of 1T-SDRAM. It's 1 transistor instead of 6 to reduce costs of RAM for it. It's less costly than normal SDRAM (with six transistors) used in PCs.

Metroid Prime Hunters is coming out on May 08, 2005. It is Nintendo's first first person shooter for the Dual Screen. I've played the demo, and I haven't figured out how to shoot the gun while moving using the touch pad.

Anyhow, Wipeout Pure and Ridge Racers are two excellent videogames at launch for the Playstation Pocket.

Visual Basic starts on the 13th for me, and will be an online course similar to Cisco. I'll be getting my books tomorrow with a blank check, and be sure to share copies of my work because my site is on computers. Typing up code might come easy for me if I happen to have natural programming skills. I am excellent at setting down at a computer for hours on end - this is certain. I'll only touch the surface of Visual Basic next week.

My goal is to become an accomplished network technician or programmer, and I hope I never get mad and walk out. I don't know - it'll be fun come Thursday.

Drawn blood for blood test (2005-01-17 05:24)

Yesterday, I had to go to the Doctor for a blood test, and my blood will be sent to my consoler that I don't like in Minneapolis, Minnesota. I have type A+ blood for those who want to know. Yet the bandage the nurse stuck to my arm hurt more than the needle! I'm on medication so the doctors want to find out if it's affecting my organs or immune system, and the test will last me another 3 or 4 years. I remember seeing LABCORP on the nurse's shirt. LABCORP must have a super computer that can analyze my DNA in minutes. That's kind of scary. A computer can read my DNA and terrestrial elements? The 12 hour "fastening" was some what hard to manage, but it didn't leave me feeling too hungry. The worst thing about it was not drinking Mountain Dew for 12 hours! Guess what I did when I got home? I ate a 14" Pepperoni Pizza, and a 24 ounce bottle of Mountain Dew too. Afterwards, I logged onto Cartharon Electrica. I'm the 2nd highest distributor there.

Three days ago, I drove to WITC in 2 below freezing weather - my windows had frost on them. It's all apart of being a Wisconsinite and completely normal this time of year. I wanted to burn copies of all three discs of MS Visual Basic .NET 2003 because the school wanted me to buy off Microsoft.com. The school is with an alliance with Microsoft! Grrrr.

I used my negotiating skills and convinced the Visual Basic teacher, Dyane, to burn a copy of Visual Basic .Net 2003. Yay! I was reading the prelude to the book which tells me about the bold terms of programming. A nice feature of Visual Basic 7.1 is the “source code spell checker” called Visual C++ Remote Debugger.

I’ve worked with Visual Basic briefly in 11th grade in high school and made a Tic Tac Toe program only to get carried away with my own project afterwards. How can I plug-in the open source GTK 2x compiler into Visual Basic?

The answer is unclear to me now. Most people use Visual Basic’s internal compiler.

I’m going to find some MP3 VB script that automatically detects WMP’s MP3 codec, and have music playing when my program opens!

Why when I download Tic Tac Toe script from a site to compile it asks me to upgrade to v7.1 so I do it, and the result gives errors! It’s a simple script – 82K uncompressed.

Is the Update Wizard dialog box going to give me problems in the future? If v7.1 is truly better than v6.0....why won’t the source compile? My point is I didn’t program the code and if I got it at Free Visual Basic Code – it should work! That’s bugging the heck out of me.

My instincts tell me that maybe I should downgrade to Visual Basic 6.0, while another part of me says keep VB7 because that’s what the text book says to use.

Meanwhile, I’ve figured out that VB makes an EXE file in the BIN folder of the My Project Folder when my project is saved. How nice of Microsoft. No wonder I couldn’t find a “Create EXE” command somewhere on the tool bar.

One thing I’m wondering about my site is why aren’t I an advance user yet? I could go over to Dynamic Drive where that slide-in menu is, and add it too my site any time I wanted too. Yes, I know where Addicted2Yew gets her script. In fact, I tried to have my own JavaScript drop-down menu from the top of the page generated by Xara Menu maker. I have everything it takes to be an advance user is my point yet I am not. I can redesign sites God dang it! I’m talented with Namo Webeditor. I can make things happen. Yet, no body will know because I’m freelancing for free, and working in an entirely different field at the same time. Wasn’t that Template 7 great?

I got no help developing Ian’s Quintessential Blog 2x either. I did all the code cleaning and art making for that site including all the writing you see before you.

The fact remains that I’m my own administrator of my Angelfire and Geocities sites where everything is my choice.

Well, I went to Toyriffic, I got a really bad welcome at the game store. Let me guess I can’t be talented there. That’s sucks. I would walk out (like I did in school) Anyways, I found the new Zelda game for Gameboy Advance called The Minish Cap. I also choose Legacy of Kain Defiance. I can’t be talented because I played 300+ games in my life. What kind of world do we live in anyhow? I can see that games aren’t the apex of many people’s lives. There is always some gamer with a bigger collection! I found out that the store guy there plays ROMs illegally and doesn’t seem to bother him at all. Okay, that’s what I do, but that’s my little secret which I only tell about here. The point is school will start and cut my playing time in half.

Today, I happen to have 1964 installed on my computer so I went to NGemu.com to find what’s happen’n. There wasn’t anything useful in the last 2 weeks except 1 file – Rice’s N64 Graphic plug-in 6.0.0c. It works for N64 roms, and Rice is the leading contributor for N64 graphics plug-ins for emulators Project 64k and 1964. The couple last versions of Rice’s N64 video plug-in works great – and I was playing Extreme G and Ocarina of Time on my computer. Remember, the plugin makes N64 games look high resolution on the monitor.

The Legend of Zelda - Minish Cap is based on Link to the Past duplicating game play which was apart of The Four Swords on Gameboy Advance.

My friend couldn’t make it over this week. He’s the non-geek friend I have. It looks like he’s my only friend now. Previously, I claimed Bob stopped talking too me and Chuck is no longer “available”. I wanted to play Playstation 2 with someone. I’m not mean to my friend.

It’s obviously more difficult getting through to him.

Well, that's it for now.

Encoding new Xvid movies. :) (2005-01-21 12:07)

Well, I'm back again. I've been having problems with the pirated version of MS Visual Basic .Net 2003. The programs compile correctly although can only be seen on my computer, but no one else's. So I to make certain that it was the software....I installed it on my custom PC which has a much cleaner file system, and was able to compile VB script that can run on any computer. After I backup new MP3s and internet downloads on DVDR, I'll reformat my hard drive. I'm encoding Laurence of Arabia to Xvid format. It could have been the fact Novell Log-in 4.3x system was installed on her computer too. Yes, I mean the same bloody firewall that blocks most P2P clients and MSN Messenger. Even if I did have MSN Messenger I don't have any one to talk too. I can't remember the last time I talked to Bob. Dyane said that she reads her student's script many times, and this never happened to her.

I should have said,"Well it's happening to you now! It's your fault for burning me faulty discs."

To make sure it won't cause future problems, Dad will get a copyrighted version for me.

I figured out that VB6 uses a different file extension than VB7. VB7 uses *.vb extension and VB6 uses *.vbs. Anyhow, Visual Basic 7 is compatible with some Visual Basic 6 files, but not the other way round. I completed the first two chapters in the book on Visual Basic. The only problem is I have never gotten a Visual Basic 6 file to work on my computer.

Updated handheld collection

I downloaded Xvid 1.1.0-beta1 today. It is noticeably faster than Xvid 1.01 forgetting I was using a 7 month old codec for couple films.

Xvid developers got their source code from DivX :) 3.11 which was made open source through legal issues of MS's WMV9 video codec. The next release of DivX would be known as DivX 4, while a new open source spin-off codec called Xvid appeared from nowhere. Both codec use the same technology, and are compatible with each other.

Xvid 1.1.0 beta 1 Binary. The program I use to make Xvid video from NTSC DVDs is a brilliant tool called 1Click2DVD Ripper. It couldn't be simpler to use. It has a Wizard for all those difficult things, and in 2 minutes you can have a movie compressing in a codec of your choice.

I also got a chance to play Resident Evil 4 two nights ago. School was holding me up for a while. Gamecube graphics look stretched on the LCDTV giving its true pixilation. The textures are very detailed for a Gamecube game, but the Gamecube isn't powerful enough to take away the jagged lines.

The "jaggies" were much less apparent on my analog TV. Anyways, I set the game audio to Pro Logic II so there is a noticeable surround sound effect with everything. Rain drops coming from RE4 are really life-like! Hmm, all Capcom had to do is record REAL RAIN plus have the developers moan, grown, and taunt! For some reason dead people (those ones where I shot the head off) keep coming back to kill Leon and Ashley. RE4 gives the gamers who play it the impression all zombies are immortal (can not be killed because they're already dead) My LCD TV has Dolby Digital 5.1 Surround Sound. Sound is sound regardless right? At least I think so. So if you want to have surround sound that'll stay in you're room, there isn't any need to have 5 satellite speakers now is there? It's a nice to have, but not essential. Problem is about speakers these days are Pro Logic II amplifiers, 2 satellite speakers, and bass speaker costs around $170. After I spend money on PSP shall I buy bigger speakers for my TV? It would sound a heck a lot better than the TV's internal speakers. I have the President's daughter, Ashley, and am going to exit the T-virus very smart zombies infested village once I can find the scanner (an eye ball) for the door. Actually, this game isn't any less difficult than Resident Evil Zero only the zombies taunt you, open doors and throw grenades at Leon & Ashley. I'm not using a game FAQ either. Maybe I should – it'll surely accelerate game play. I'm cheating with Action Replay so I can complete the game before Monday.

I also have to type up a small document for technical writing Monday. Hmm, wonder if I'll get it done in time?

:) Anyhow, back to describing Resident Evil 4....I believe the voice acting is well done for any videogame. Meaning it doesn't get much better than this people! Usually I hear untalented actors speaking lines – Leon and Ashley sound above average because this is a Resident Evil, and it MUST live up to the expectations of previously seen in Resident Evil: Reborn or Resident Evil Zero. Resident Evil 4 is also coming to Playstation 2. Don't believe that only For Gamecube label on the case because it ain't true!

So I got pass the door, and what do I find? – More Smart Zombie Monks of course, and they're catapulting fireballs at me! I believe I dead once or twice. It's safer to find shelter from fireballs than trying to dodge them! This game doesn't scare me at all like the reviews said it would. I know it's suppose to be scary, but I'm not scared! Wonder how much harder the game gets? I can get use to this shooting off heads with shotgun thing

I forgot to add Final Fantasy XII and Gran Turismo 4 to my highly anticipated list about 3 posts back. It'll add those two games to it. Final Fantasy XII will be better than Final Fantasy 10 I imagine. I played Final Fantasy X back in 2003. There are gamers who like role playing, and gamers who like action games. I like both, and many of the clerks at Toyriffic would say the same. Four out of five RPGs come from Japan – that's not bad, it's just how it's been done for over a decade.

Speaking of which - Gran Turismo 4 will have a lot more cars, tracks, and soundtracks this time around. I can't wait! It's coming out February 11, 2005. IGN and Gamespy are giving it the same score as Gran Turismo 3 - A Spec!

This is absolutely excitement going on right now!

I downloaded trance totaling 100 MB off Kazaa Lite including the other 5 songs off iMesh. I found a Radio Shack advertisement on DVDRs for only 13 bucks, so I had Radio Shack mail the 25 pack spindle to me. I saved 60 % off the normal cost. [4.5 x 25 = 112.5 GB] I want to use the entire DVDR, which is hard to do because IT'S A LOT OF DATA to fill. It's easiest putting DivX movies on them.

Dual-layer DVD burners are out costing anywhere from $80 – $180 though I am having a really hard time finding dual layer DVDs to buy. If it was easy to buy spindles – I would buy a dual layer DVD burner immediately.

It's a lot of storage for the dollar. Approximately 2¢ for a MB.

Think of that in terms of compressed data – it's mind boggling! Today, I'm duplicated/converting a lot of movies to MPEG4 including Saving Private Ryan, Sleepy Hollow, and 1951 version of The Christmas Carol starring Alastair Sim. This version was supposed to be the best version of a dozen versions. Of course, never trust everything that Hollywood tells you.

Shining Tears* (2005 SEGA)

Looks good doesn't it?

I found Shining Tears for PS2 in Game Informer. It's Sega's next RPG. It's 2D like Shining Force II. I might buy it because Shining Force II is a highly regarded game for Genesis. Now that Sega is a 3rd party I'll keep buying sequels on non-Sega consoles. I'll check out the review first, but it won't be long before I get to play it. It's a strategy RPG. I've played Shining Force II through emulation – it was fun for couple hours, but I always get distracted with Internet browsing. I don't see how it can be a short attention span since I'll still looking at the monitor. I don't play old games long enough to make an accurate judgment. The new Shining Tears will be a hack 'n slash old school RPG made recently to bring back old charm. Those of you who like old games – look for this one from Sega in March.

I downloaded the Gamecube emulator, Dolphin 1.03 on Tuesday, and it seems to be capable with commercial games. I looked on the interface for a BIOS input, where there was none. So this means there must be a way to get Gamecube GCMS off the Internet – either from Bittorrent or Emule.

A new beginning for an ex-online gamer? (2005-01-28 01:20)

I find out that I don't need to go to school unless I need help. 100 % of my school work is done via email attachments. For the command prompt, I did some cut and paste in MS Paint so the screenshots would appear they've been taken off a networked PC, so the truth is it was much faster to cheat than making a network just so I could make a screenshot. I'm completed assignments 1 and 2 of my first obligated class, technical writing, which I've posted online. The Documents. My brain was tired afterwards, but I continued on because I had to make room for Chapter 3 in Visual Basic text book. They ask me too post code, and they somehow put it in context, but I must comprehend the book's technical sentences. The teacher who taught the class offered her time if I chose to drive in.

I'm stuck on chapter 3 of ten chapters, and can't stop me. I shall triumph Visual Basic, and the day shall come I'll pass this damn course. I am smart enough to pass Visual Basic – really I am. You'll see!

It's been close to two weeks since I last bought a videogame, so I bought Baldur's Gate Dark Alliance II for $19.95 and World of Warcraft for $50. All I have to do is convince someone with a credit card (not me) to pay for the monthly fee in order to connect to the servers.

It can be done, but would that money is better spent on other software? It is true that not all games require the gamer to pay monthly costs. I have done the same exact thing when I bought Final Fantasy XI and Anarchy Online except now I heard a rumor that Anarchy Online is free. WoW received a 9.5 at IGN.com and 9.1 from Game Informer Magazine which was part of the reason why I bought it. The only complaint the editors had was the low polygon count but the textures are indeed top notch. It shouldn't be an issue.

Which is why console games are so attractive – just turn the power button on and play the game. I am beginning to wonder if I am afraid to play PC games. It's been so long since I played one. I am dedicated at buying new games, but I have never play long enough to get the satisfaction out of the games I have bought. I am beginning to worry if it's my fault I invest in something that I don't enjoy.

I can't feel regret since that'll keep me from buying any software at all! I do have a lot of games for old consoles, and ALL games get old some time. That's why the Internet calls them died games. I don't know what you call a game that's "dead" which you're playing currently? I heard some Internet sites call dead freeware games....abandonware?

Shall I call any dead game "Abandonware" now!?! Abandonware games can be expensive especially if it's rare find. A good example is when I bought Suikoden for a full $50. In the case of Suikoden verses Suikoden IV, the truth is I picked an old game over a new game that cost the same. I normally wouldn't do that except if the score was very, very high in case of Suikoden (1996) from Konami. I've done my part in purchasing some old school videogames.

In 2 years my N64 and Playstation games will be considered old school. My point is every 2 generations backwards is considered old school in my opinion. That's 1978 – 2000 everyone, and that time is approaching quickly.

It looks like we're getting satellite Internet from the phone company for us rural Wisconsinites. $60 for 1.1 Mbps Internet all for myself 90 % of the time! The modem will be in my office somewhere. Electricians are going to now string CATEGORY 6 RJ-45 straight-through cable throughout my place.

Okay, I'll talk about me now. I've been working on my homework every other day. Exhausting work you know – spell check and writing near perfect takes 5 – 6 hours of brain work, and have been trying to write the grammar perfected assignment. I hadn't mentioned that the Linux assignment I've aced.

I had an interesting conversation with admin. Admin's the administrator at Carthartton Electronica. Gamers don't read reviews from neither the Internet nor magazines – casual gamers buy games at random he says. I have a feeling that what he says is true, but I can't help but think of how many bad games I've avoided by reading reviews? It's true that a game is only supposed to pass the time. I find it more than that – a game must be a satisfying experience and not any average game. I find his explaining more about purchasing good software by luck more than anything else? I don't see it his way. Since 1999, I've been reading IGN's game reviews like crap on a goose.

I'm tired – goodnight Bloggers – 'till next time, and there will be a next time.

7.2 February

Bought first DL-DVD Burner on Tuesday & it arrived. (2005-02-04 03:16)

The European Space Agency had success with Huygens which is a space probe that on Saturn's Moon, Titan. The Huygens space craft is equipped with a microphone. Hagens sends its signal to the Saturn's satellite, Cassini, which sends a signal to Earth's satellite. This is officially the ESA's 3rd spacecraft, yet its biggest project. The Huygens space craft can photograph 20 meters of Titan's terrain. Titan is the only moon with an atmosphere. The Huygens space craft will be the only time in our lifetime that scientists will get to see Titan up close. It may unravel secrets of the Milky Way Galaxy. Saturn is a really cold planet so the climate is -200 degrees Celsius. Saturn was only discovered 4 centuries ago by Galileo Galilei (a famous astronomer).

ESA launched the Mars Express to Mars, and the Smart1 to orbit the moon which are their previous successes. Huygens will transmit data to Saturn's first modern satellite, Cassini. Huygens-Cassini Spacecraft was the 3rd heaviest spacecraft (attached to a rocket) in history. During the Cassini journey, Cassini used it's largest of 3 antennas to shield its instruments from the Sun's gamma and ultra violet rays. ESA scientists will soon know if life existed on Titan...if ever. Titan has a thick atmosphere is rich in organic compounds. If life did exist on Titan, that means aliens lived on Titan in this solar system 100 million years ago.

Today, I've just ordered a state-of-the-art speed dual-layer DVD burner that's twice as fast as the installed DVD burner now. For CDR burning it's 48X burning speed.

DVDR+ is 16X, DVDR- is 16x.

The dual-layer speed is 4X. Well, dual layer DL-DVDR+ are 150 % more expensive than DVDRs now. I have over 120 DVDRs to burn on because I got a 50 pack of them on Christmas day. It normally took me 4 minutes to burn a CDR, and 1 hr 15 minutes to burn a DVD. That time will soon be halved thanks reduced prices on new hardware.

When I looked on Tigerdirect.com, I saw that USB thumb drives have gone way down in price!

The truth is I've never bought one for 10 months and already TD sells 1 GB thumb sticks for $80. Maybe I should wait 6 months a get a great deal on a 512 MB USB thumb stick? Yes, this is really great, but I chose to buy a DVD burner over a 1 GB USB thumb stick. A DVD stores 4.487 GB of data compared to 1.018 GB on flash memory.

Flash memory is used in many digital cameras, it's unmatched for lithium battery powered devices.

I've been being lazy for a long time - 5 days there about. It looks like I won't have to worry about that Technical Writing class since I'm acing it!

Tomorrow, I'll drive to school, and work out issues in the book.

I found a unity that can rip PS2 music or video off the disc. This is possible since PS2 file systems can be seen via PC DVD-ROM. Cube Media Player 2 can do this by scanning the DVD and allow you to listen to it. If you have DivX or Xvid installed than there's an efficient way to compress the video the user ripped for storage on CD or DVD. Cube Media Player Homepage . I haven't got mine to work yet for whatever reason.

I have some fantastic news (can you sense the sarcasm?! My custom (Athlon XP 2600) PC's 120 GB Serial ATA HD went compooie. Before I had some bugs in the OS, and as a result the BIOS beeped at me during usage (which means the motherboard is giving CPU errors on my BIOS) so I try to boot Knoppix 3.6 LiveCD, and was able to burn some remaining Xvid movies from the hard drive onto CD-ROM. This event happened on February 01, 2004 before I installed the DVD +/- RW from my Dell PC into this computer's IDE bay. Now, I have reason to believe when I deleted the partition, therefore, the bios won't detect it.

Luckily, I have a secondary 40GB Serial-ATA hard drive to work with until I can do a low-level format to reconstruct the master boot record thus readying the hard drive for OS re-installation.

I am happy that Iraqis got to elect a president for their country. There was some corruption in Saddam Hussein's Dictatorship; now all they have to do is create a constriction and stable Democratic government that won't be corrupted.

Saddam was good at asking for money he never returned. We've fought a war for about 2 years there, and unlike most wars we've lost fewer American lives than any war except for Operation Desert Storm in 1991 which wasn't really a War as it was clearing our way through the desert clearing the way to Baghdad. Now, Iraq can start importing oil to us which is what the USA is looking for, because OPEC is not happy with George W. Bush's decision to reduce oil prices for all Americans. The point of selling oil is to make a profit which OPEC wants more of. It's already $2 a gallon of gas here in Wisconsin.

This is Ian signing off.

Chapter 1: Creating Ethernet or LAN

A LAN stands for local area network and it's all about hooking many computers up to a network in a room. I haven't had experience with fiber-based Ethernet yet, so I am going to have to stay with ground based; wire called RJ45. Second, the category I'm using is CAT5e, which is 1000 Megabits bandwidth for the length of the cable. For cable longer than this there's a need for an Ethernet closet. For now, omit though we're hooking up straight-through cable from the PC to the switchboard (what is recommended these days) or Cat5 layer 1 hub according to the OSI model. Third, the person involved with networking all the computers together will need to gather all the supplies for it including an IEEE 802.3 switch board, a IEEE 802.3 router, two to four RJ-45 straight-through cables (100 meters recommended) Now, I'll first explain how to set up a network using a hub.

The hub is the most primitive gateway to networking because it's a layer 1 device. With technology progressing - few people use Cat5 hubs any more unlike 1990 thru 1999 - in other words they're an older technology. Be sure each computer has at least CAT4 network interface cards working properly. The NIC has a female port which the RJ-45 will fit into perfectly. Your hub will have 5 or 8 ports on it so plug-in the straight-through cable from the first port of the hub (left to right) to the PC's NIC card the user is working with.

If the user has a second PC, hook another RJ-45 from the PC to the Hub. Make sure it's a straight-through cable or it won't work. Plug in the opposite end to the 2nd port of the hub. If the reader has a 3rd PC then do the same to the way until all 5 or 8 ports of the hub are plugged in. Now, MS Windows has a funny way of trying to do everything for the computer user. Sometimes we'll need to step in and take control of it before it takes control of us.

Step 1: Control Panel from start menu

Step 2: Control Panel:

Step 3: Click on Network and Internet Connections.

Step 4: Check and see if the NIC is recognizing the network connection via router / hub connection.

Step 5: Next you can either change the (I)nternet (P)rotocol Address by going into Properties, Internet Protocol (TCP/IP) in the properties dialog box. I'll tell the user how to do this in the next chapter. On my computer there is an "X" on Local Area Connection since that NIC either doesn't have a driver or more likely aren't connected by a cable to an existing network. This problem is most likely to be solved by hooking a RJ-45 cable up to the NIC. As the user may realize - it's never a good idea to have two cables hooked up to one PC even if there is more than one network available. The reason is because an IEEE 802.3 switch board, and IEEE 802.3 router are better at solving this problem.

Routers are also known as intelligent hubs.

Step 6: The fifth step of this procedure is to use the New Connection Wizard to connect all the PCs to each other via star topology or extended Star topology. The 2nd dialog box of New Connection Wizard is seen below. The administrator wants to click on the Set up a home or small office network.

Step 7: Windows XP will automatically go into Network Setup Wizard. Click on Next twice. The 2nd dialog box only tells you what NIC cards are not connected. As the user can now see I checked Ignore disconnected network hardware. This is an example of my computer:

Step 8: Windows XP will ask you to "select a connection method". What this means is when the user's host PC is connected to the Internet you check the first option. Otherwise, the reader will check the other option for all other PCs. The third option is only there if the user doesn't want a network connection, but ignore that because nothing bad happens when the current computer isn't connected to ISP when set to "this computer connects to the Internet through another computer".

Step 9: Windows XP will go through more windows, but I'd ignore them until the 2nd to last dialog box asks you to prompt for installation CD. The administrator does not want to insert any CD in the CD/DVD-ROM drive. So click no on that.

Step 10: If you have done steps 1 through 8, then the user shall have a fully operational network. This procedure should be done with any type of ground cable including multi-mode fiber-optic cable. Since none of us are rich enough to afford multi-mode fiber-optic cable it shouldn't be a concern.

Chapter 2: Manually overriding IP Addresses

Step 1: To manually override IP addresses means giving the computer an IP address just for OFFLINE Local area networks. Only a couple numbers will be allowed, and the user shall use only use the "192.168.?.? way" because these bits are guaranteed to work if you have a working NIC. Shall we start? Good. The user will go back into Network connections window, and right click on the NIC connection as seen below to get to the properties dialog box.

Step 2: Once step 1 is completed and you're in the Properties dialog box, go over one tab into Internet Protocol TCP/IP Properties. The user will want to copy the 2nd picture exactly. The default gateway is the hosts PC's IP address. Your information comes from his/her PC since it's the Server. All LANs need a host PC or host server. All the other PCs are known as nodes or sometimes referred to as workstations in commercial situations. Remember, keep the Default Gateway the same for every node or the LAN will partially work or not work at all. Either way, it spells trouble when not done correctly. If this happens to the administrator than it's not very fun checking every computer again, and tying in the correct default gateway for each one.

Step 3: Once Step 2 is completed find your IP address by the command prompt by Start, Programs, Accessories, Command Prompt. Or you can do Start, Run. In the Run Prompt dialog box type in "Command" than press Enter.

Step 4: The fourth step is to type in "ipconfig" at the underscore in the command prompt. The NIC will give you the IP address of the existing computer node from the NIC card. If there isn't one assigned then the user has to assign it him/herself. If the reader's NIC works - he/she will have an IP address. If the coder doesn't have an IP address - replace the NIC card. I'll show the reader how to do that which I'll explain in the 3rd chapter. Let's say the PC NIC card works. We'll proceed to Step 5.

Step 5: Now type in "ping 192.168.1.2" into the command prompt, and you'll get a result similar to this if not exactly due to the different administrator settings.

Chapter 3: Installing NIC Card

Step 1: Make sure the reader who so happens to also be a computer user has a screw driver, an electro-static discharge wrist band, and the power cable connected from the PC to the wall socket or power strip. A hardware installer must sure he/she is wearing shoes, has a T-shirt on with no extra clothing, and hands aren't wet so all of this. All of these precautions will I minimize electrostatic discharge on the motherboard. It is highly recommended for the installer to have an electrostatic wrist band. Finally, hook the wrist band end (should be a clip) to the power box fan. If the power box is not an option for any reason - hook the end piece to the grounding hole of a wall socket. All wrist bands should have two parts: a clip and an end which fits inside the grounding hole of a wall socket.

Step 2: Now, it is necessary to take out the filling metal plates and replace it with the NIC card.

Step 3: Next, snap the NIC card in place make sure it's good and tight. Finally, screw it down enough so you can unscrew it when there is a need too.

Step 4: Install the software from the CD or floppy which came with the PCI NIC card. Windows XP plug and play feature will probably identify any new NIC cards installed on a cold boot without a specific driver, so don't feel bad if reader in question can't find the CD. The same goes for IEEE 802.11B or IEEE 802.11G wireless PCI NIC cards because they'll install the same way as normal NIC cards. To guarantee a LAN turning out....do Chapter 1 Steps 1 - 8 over again.

Chapter 4: Creating an Old Fashioned Bus Topology

The point of Chapter 4 is that it's done exactly the way as Chapter 1 did with straight-through RJ-45 cable. Make sure there is a cross-over RJ-45 cable connected before you go to Step 1.

Step 1: Control Panel from start menu

Step 2: Control Panel:

Step 3: Click on Network and Internet Connections

Step 4: Check and see if the NIC is recognizing the network connection via router / hub connection.

Step 5: Next, the computer user can either change the IP Address by going into Properties, Internet Protocol (TCP/IP) in the properties dialog box. I'll tell the user how to do this in the next chapter. For example, on my computer there is an "X" on Local Area Connection, since that NIC either doesn't have a driver or more likely is not connected by a cable to an existing network. This problem is most likely to be solved by hooking a cross-over RJ-45 cable up to two NICs for two PCs. As the user may realize it's never a good idea to have two cables hooked up to one PC even if there is more than one network available. The reason is because an IEEE 802.3 switch board and IEEE 802.3 router are better at solving this problem as a Cisco standard.

Step 6: The fifth step of this procedure is to use the New Connection Wizard to connect all the PCs to each other via bus topology. The 2nd dialog box of New Connection Wizard is seen below. The computer user will want to click on the Set up a home or small office network option.

Step 7: Windows XP will automatically continue with Network Setup Wizard. Click on the Next button twice. The 2nd dialog box only tells you what NIC cards are not connected. As the user can now see, I checked Ignore disconnected network hardware. This is an example of my computer:

Step 8: Windows XP will ask the administrator to select a connection method. What this means is that when the administrator's host PC is connected to the Internet, the check the first option; otherwise, you check the other option for all other PCs. The third option is only there if the computer user doesn't want an Internet connection, but I'll ignore that because nothing bad happens when a computer isn't connected to the Internet once set to option 2.

Step 9: Windows XP will go through more windows, but I'd ignore those ones until the 2nd to last dialog box asks you to prompt for installation CD. You do not want to insert any CD in the CD/DVD-ROM drive. So click the No button on that one.

Step 10: If the user has done steps 1 through 8, then you shall have a fully operational network. This procedure shall be done with any type of ground cable, including multi-mode fiber-optic cable. Since none of us are rich enough to afford multi-mode fiber-optic cable, it shall not be a concern.

Chapter 5: Creating Straight-Through & Crossover Cable

- Cable to split
- RJ-45 connectors
- Cable splitter
- RJ-45 clammer
- Cat 5e/Cat 6 compatible wire tester

Introduction – This is for people who don't need excess cable. They can cut some existing RJ-45 cable they bought or maybe have a spindle of cable they can cut to length.

Step 1: Find some straight-through cable and cut approximately 10 feet of it.

Step 2: Strip the rubber jacket about a couple inches (just enough to fit in the connector piece) Do it for both ends. If the reader accidentally cuts off the cable all together, strip more off, which is why I'm giving the extra length of RJ-45 so mistakes can happen without throwing the whole piece away.

Step 3: Untwist the wires on the first end.

Crossover Cable

Step 4: Slip each wire in the holes of the connector gently. If the wires get crunched try it again unless the wire won't work because it's no good. When this happens the user must strip more jacket off, and cut all the color coded wires evenly. Make sure the wires reach the end of the connector and are all even. The connectors are transparent.

Step 5: Once everything looks good clamp it down by fitting the end piece correctly in the RJ-45 clasper. The connector can only go in one way. Clamp it down all the way.

Step 6: Get a Cat 5e or Cat6 cable tester and usually all you need to do is connect the two ends of the cable to the two parts of the tester and press Test button. The user should get a lot of Oks or Passes. If there happens to be any Failures or Not Passes on the LCD screen than do all the steps in Chapter 5 over again until successful.

Installing ReAct OS on a thumb drive possible? (2005-02-06 07:02)

Today, I got React OS to work on my USB thumb drive. The idea dawned on me when I saw the "Drive H" or USB thumbstick on the monitor in Windows Installation when the OS was about to format a couple days ago when I attempted to install WinXP on my Athlon XP PC. So what I'm about to install on is only 128 MB, but that's plenty of space since React OS is less than 30 MB.

My particular PC has a dual boot partition so it probably couldn't find where NTFS was on the master boot record (location table on the hard drive). I uploaded FreeDOS onto my USB thumb drive. The next step was installing MS-DOS 6.22, but I didn't have the original floppies so I went the FreeDOS open source route by simply extract the contents of the FreeDOS zip archive to the thumb drive. Now, DOS is running on the USB thumb drive which can be activated by which device boots first from the BIOS menu.

I've downloaded the ReactOS 0.25 ISO image, and burnt it onto a CDR. Afterwards, boot the CD from the BIOS boot, and went through the instructions until it asked me to partition which drive, and picked my USB thumb drive to format on. It installed about 30 MB worth of OS on it.

The speed of the CD-ROM obviously increases the OS latency a lot, but this OS boots up very quickly. I've added small programs such as the new self-boot Mozilla Firefox 1.0 Final, Irfanview 3.95 and Winamp 2.95. Finally, Firefox loads in React OS whereas before it couldn't have. I could hear tunes because I added 1 MP3 file onto the thumb drive as well.

My second idea I had with React OS is my own experiment trying to combine ISO images. That is making a Data CD ISO image with all the files I want to run in React OS made with Nero 6, and combine that with the existing React OS LiveCD ISO image to make a new ISO image. Unfortunately, I don't know what program to download that'll combine both ISO images.... I only know it exists somewhere on the web. In theory it shall extend the LiveCD with a bunch of extra programs for React OS.

For some reason the WINE's development team and React's development team hadn't yet uploaded a deluxe version of their Live CD for download.

Anyways, I recommend someone who's combining ISOs to download a unity called Daemon Tools (a CD emulator) that can look at the file system of an ISO before I burn to a CD.

On Thursday, the electricians came, and they installed flood lights in the basement as well as CAT5e (1 Gbit RJ-45). I guess the differences between CAT5e and CAT6 is pretty insignificant otherwise I would have CAT6 in my room. If you're curious about the difference between the two, it's because CAT6 is standardized at 500 MHz instead of 300 MHz Cat5e. CAT7 RJ-45 STP will be up there around 600 MHz Gigabit Ethernet. Yep, and on top of that – my house will be wireless for satellite Internet which goes up to 1.5 Mbps. I suspect all the satellites are capable of 4 Mbps when the time comes. Only $250 for installation costs: $39 for 386 kbps; $49 for 512 kbps; $59 for 1 Mbps; $69 for 1.5 Mbps, and probably $79 for 2 Mbps.

On Friday, I drove to Toyriffic in River Falls, Wisconsin, and looked around for good deals on above average software. That's the point of going to Toyriffic.....having an idea what to look for. I wasn't there to buy any retro games. I saw Marvel vs. Capcom 2 for PS2 for $50 on top of the shelf in the entrance. I've starred at it for a long while. 2D fans usually purchase these games either because they hate polygon driven videogames or they believe games have become too sophisticated for their own good. It's just a 2D fighting game though, probably is worth less than what the store sells it for too. The first thought that came to mind was it's a rip off deal, but when a game is priced that high, it's in demand. Well, I like 2D games, but not THAT much. So I look closely at each game for each title. I know what games I own for Xbox which helped me choose which ones I would buy. Splinter Cell 2 - Pandora Tomorrow looked really good, and so did Metal Gear Solid 2 - Substance. It's another excellent Xbox game made after a Tom Clancy thriller (book). My dad has the book you know. I made my final decision and I was out of there. Then I went to ShopKo and bought Suikoden IV. Suikoden III was very good, I've started playing about 5 hours, so I suspect Suikoden IV is also good, but not as good as Suikoden III.

I trust IGN though, Suikoden III earned a 9.5/10 and Suikoden IV earned a 7.9/10. Suikoden IV was reduced $39 when I've bought it. Was it worth the purchase? I sure hope so because it is a 3D RPG which is my favorite genre or was at one time.

That's about 80 dollars I've spent on 3 games on Friday. The Splinter Cell 2 and MGS2 Xbox DVD cases look brand new which is good enough for me.

new games: Baldur's Gate Dark Alliance 2 (PS2), Suikoden IV (PS2), Splinter Cell 2 (XBOX), MGS2: Substance (Xbox), World of Warcraft (PC)

I've been playing Metroid via Metroid Prime by activating a code that'll bypass the GBA link cable connection. The cheat is activated by R trigger + B during the menu screen and Metroid will automatically boot off the disc. The emulator lets me use the joystick + directional pad. I got pass the wasps where the platforms are. I kept hitting the moving platform and got zapped! After 25 minutes of retries, I've gotten frustrated, and stopped playing once and for all. Afterwards, I've played Metroid Prime because I was sick of dieing in Metroid, and I couldn't find a way into the abandoned space pirate space station after that first room with the ejection pods. I've scanned everything with Samus's visor for 40 minutes without luck. A game faq would have solved this problem, but I've wanted to figure out how to get out of the room myself. It's my stubbornness.

I've updated my game list to version 1.23 on this site.

Saturday, I was continuing working on Chapter 4 of Visual Basic .Net 2003 Standard the non-pirated version.

This time the book is asking me to insert code into the graphical interface I've made. Some of the code has "Private btnCompute_Click" the name of a button or textbox. This is why it's difficult to insert code since the book is instructing me to name every object in the program, and one typo would create errors, and could prevent everything from compiling. Thank God, I've got pass Chapter 3. Chapter 3 was horrible which took me two weeks to get pass reading and understanding it. Well, I wasn't exactly working hard every day to finish chapter 3. That may be my fault. I've been on the gaming boards this week and today especially. My pleasure is conversation with other gamers about various topic including next generation consoles.

Later today, I am going to get out of this dungeon of a room, and expose myself more to the outside world by conversation. I like conversation if it's fair. Maybe I shall go to the local state park, and walk around and enjoy the scenery?

Perhaps play Frisbee Golf? The truth is I'm too lazy to do any of those! I haven't the slightest what shall happen today. These pass days I continue pondering about my college life and what videogames I shall pursue playing in my room. I'm thinking I've done enough pondering. The NFL Super Bowl XXXIX is on today too. I'll be glued to the TV for that event. Now, that's a huge event in America, watching the Super Bowl is like watching the FIFA World Cup in Europe. Seriously! I hope the New England Patriots win.

On Monday, I am driving over to WITC to get my custom PC back. It's a hard drive problem; the master boot record is gone. The BIOS detects the hard drive though which means there must be a possibility to run a low-level format on it. The other PC (650 MHz Athlon Thunderbird) I brought over (thinking the motherboards shot) just to make sure. The CPU fan is getting an adequate power supply for the motherboard being fried – that's for certain.

The Athlon XP PC may not be the fastest computer in my room, but it does do basic 2D-based applications very well. Yeah, it also has a Geforce 5600 FX in it so it can do recently released computer games if I wanted it too.

If I made a new friend I would try to play videogames with him/her. Yeah, but that's just me. I have a whole bunch of Game Informer Mags, and it would be nice if we could just chat about the reviews. A movie or pepperoni pizza would be fine. Any sort of multiplayer is preferred. Extensive game collecting would be appreciated. Remembering back to those endless nights of Diablo 2 online play on Battlenet USEAST, that's what I bought World of Warcraft for (to play on Battlenet USEAST again). I imagine an online account as a place to make new friends and well as new foes. If this is as good as Neverwinter Nights which had few legacy (modem) issues along with it, I would be happier than a lark. It's supposed to be better than Diablo 2 which is shocking because Diablo 2 was just right in terms of difficulty. I still need to get my hands on a credit card so I can pay the monthly fee. I wanted to do this with Final Fantasy XI a year ago. Yet see here, it's Final Fantasy...the top notch RPG franchise that won the world over from Playstation (and NES, SNES) to it's 3rd installment on PC. Well, most of the world.

I almost forgot about that game. Today, I was looking at the 140 page thick game manual that came with the box. The book gives a lengthy description of all the characters in the game as well as all the hints a noob like me can hope to grasp. Yeah, all I know about the game is from Internet reviews. I hear it's huge when playing on foot.

This is Ian Signing off.

Adding to existing 'compiled' CD images yourself (2005-02-10 09:59)

About 2 days ago, I finished building a new template for the personal page at Angelfire. This new page featured some better textures than before. I got the months between October 2004 to February 2005 ported to it as well as the previous photo gallery, game collection, design, and biography sections. My personal webpage doesn't get bigger than before, but more detailed most of the time. Hope everyone likes it.

To finish the topic about combining ISOs two entries ago, I found out that apparently I can extract the contents of any ISO image to a new folder using the well known compression program, WinRAR, and then repack the ISO with more files in Nero 6. Right now, I've collected a lot of mp3s so instead of wasting a whole CD on just Damn Small Linux 0.9.3, I'll cleverly use the extra 650 MB for extra music and pictures because I'm smart like that. Right now, I only have 280 MB of miscellaneous files to put on it.

As for React OS, I wonder if someone can extract all the contents of the LIVECD on a USB thumb drive from Windows, and the OS will boot up from the thumb drive thinking it's on CD. The problem is older BIOS have a hard time recognizing operating systems on USB thumb drives.

The past few days I wasn't gaming, but working on homework from college. I have to write a report suggesting a particular hardware-related device over another, and had some ideas including "Xbox vs. PS2", "Pentium 4 vs. Athlon 64", "Apple PowerPC vs. IBM PC", and "Geforce vs. Radeon". I haven't decided which one will make the best report.

I'll take this one topic at a time. IBM PCs are better than Apple Power PCs because PCs make for better gaming than PowerPC (excluding the fact that next generation consoles will support PowerPC hardware). There are more PC games on store shelves for PC than PowerPC. All my programs I need to use only run on MS Windows, and I would hate using Virtual PC to emulate Windows so I could run Windows applications. If only I could have all my programs stream off DVD under React OS LiveCD. React OS is not at a stable build where it is able to run every Windows application in existence.

The 2nd argument is how Pentium 4s are better than Athlon 64s. Intel processors are always more expensive, but those last longer in your PC than Athlons traditionally. Athlon 64s run hotter, therefore, AMD's CPUs don't last as long which might stop working after 3 years or 10 years. Who knows?

Historically, I've fried my CPUs before they get worn out. I had this happen to me before. Sometimes the PC shuts down immediately when the inside temperature gets above 72 degrees, or at least on mine it does.

The third argument would be Radeon 9200,9500, 9700, 9800 vs. Geforce 4 FX series. Both cards are very reliable, both do the exact same thing. What people should look for is the clock speed, texture bandwidth and amount of video RAM on the cards. Geforces are normally less expensive cards. I own both Radeon and Geforce cards. I get good frame rates from both my Radeon 9800 XT in my Dimension XPS and Geforce FX 5600 in my Athlon XP PC. Nvidia has brought out its Geforce 6600 GPU which is their answer to ATI's Radeon 9800 series. The only GPU card that failed was my Geforce 256 when my PC got struck by lightning in 2001.

I personally favor Radeon GPUs though.

About making friends, none yet came to my door step. I'll be getting my hair cut today maybe I can scrounge around for conversation. It's not icy or too cold outside so there'll be a lot of traffic from place to place. I might be getting another videogame today, but I'm stumped whether I want to save it for Xenosaga 2 or not. I am spending a lot of money on outdated hardware these days, aren't I?

New info on Next Generation Consoles! (2005-02-15 04:36)

Hello, it's me again. I've been busy with Visual Basic which is why I can't blog as much as I use too. I've completed a final draft of my video card paper for technical writing, one of the reasons why I haven't posted in 4 days. Will I ace that one as well? I found out that my friend Randy didn't alienate me. Yeah, he's loosing his friends too. I went to his house on Saturday and I tore the seal off with my fingernail (I have short fingernails), and opened my copies of Gradius V and Ace Combat 5. He hates 2D shooters like Gradius V. Randy used to be a big NES gamer when he was younger, and hasn't bought a console since PS2. He has games like Rage Racer, Legend of Zelda, Super Mario Bros, Metal Gear 2, TMNT III - Manhattan Project.

We've played that for 40 minutes, and he likes Winning Eleven Soccer 6 International the best. Randy must like the announcers because their Australian I bet. See, I tried to get him interested in other games, but he refused even the American football game I brought over. I won against him by a goalie shot at the Keeper shootout in the end.

We're not good enough to score a goal during the game. Randy and his girlfriend watch Adult Swim on Cartoon Network that night. I went home around midnight. It was fun. Most fun I had all week actually.

I didn't mind Gradius V, it's better than what I expected since I've played freeware equivalent of those games such as Ikaruga - Radiant Silvergun 2, and it's a change for the better. Quintessentially, both games are made by Treasure which is known for their 2D shooting games on Super Nintendo and Sega Genesis.

Lately, I've been playing LaserAge, which is a Space Invaders rip-off that got decent reviews and advanced to the 14th level.

I switched to Hacker (Tetris freeware game), and the background music is encoded in MP3, so it's not those simplistic midis. Sadly, the game only came with 1 techno song during the main game.

About 68 degrees, a comfortable work space.

I've found out that Nintendo Revolution changed its name to Nintendo 21 meaning "two in one" or will play Gamecube discs too. The discs are still going to be 5 inch mini-discs, but are double-sided each side holds 5.9 GB! The Gamecube disc only holds 1.8 GB. It will hook up to the monitor, and be unrevealed at the Electronic Entertainment Expo. Sony confirmed the company will be unrevealing Playstation 3 at the end of next month. Microsoft confirmed Xbox 360 (formally Xenon) will launch between October & November in the United States, Mexico, and Canada (before Japan and Europe).

Surprisingly, I may seem like I'm a hardcore gamer, but that was true a long time ago. See, I hardly played anything other than that time at my friend's house.

Earlier today I've grabbed my old PC and put it in my room left of my Dell. It's running Redhat 9.1 Workstation. It was where my old TV is 3 months ago. Now, it servers as my parent's Internet desktop. I might have to bring it take it back, but doesn't it look cool with 3 computers in my room? I took a couple pictures and combined them seen below.

Tune in next time.

Nice blog Ian. I am from Roberts Wisconsin as well, my name is Matt. Here is my blog: <http://www.livejournal.com/users/hydrallus/>

WiMAX (802.16E) and next generation "wireless" consoles update (2005-02-18 11:18)

A virus found and asked me to close Anti-Vir so it could flood my PC with more viruses without detection. So if you see a screen like this doesn't ever close it. It's the virus lying to you! The most you can do is drag it under the start bar. Your antivirus didn't crash like the dialog box is telling you.

This is the virus lying to you! Don't do what it says or it'll download more viruses and make matters worse. And whatever you do...don't close this window

It looks like the Xbox 360 will be backwards compatible with Xbox games. Microsoft is manufacturing a HD-DVD in it (which almost doubles the space of DL-DVD). What is also known about it is Microsoft is making a wireless or Bluetooth game controller that looks similar to "Xbox Controller S", but losing the black & white buttons, therefore, better designed. The Xbox 360 is coming out at the end of this year, and will have both a 256 MB of RAM & 256-bit video card. The tri-core CPU will be clocking at 3.5 GHz. The console will be IEEE 802.11B wireless. Xbox 360 will not have an internal hard drive, however the other version called Xbox 360 HD will.

The PS3's main processor will be over 4 GHz and 64-bit meaning it can do more calculations than any high end PC. The brand name of this processor is the IBM Cell. The console will have a PS2 like design, but smaller. It will support a blu-ray drive which will play blu-ray movies, and support games on CD, DVD, DL-DVD and BD. The controllers will look like the dual shock 2. The memory cards will look like PS2 memory cards, but hold more. The internal hard drive is not confirmed yet.

CELL: Yes a super computer on a chip

The Nintendo Revolution (also called the Nintendo 2 in 1) is coming out next year, and is the most shy to the digital press fearing that its ideas will be stolen by Sony and Microsoft. So far the online community knows that Revolution will be backwards compatible with Gamecube, has a Bluetooth “rubbing” grip handle and button able wireless gyroscope controller I call the Nintendo Gyro-Wavebird, and still support mini-discs (which formally has been called GOD or generic optimal disc) researched entirely by Panasonic. The latest news confirms that Revolution will be a wireless console using IEEE 802.11b technology which means it can connect to Dual Screen or another Revolution wirelessly. The wireless range is good enough for a couple rooms away (same range as NDS). The Revolution will have a decent graphics card made by ATI Technologies in Canada, but could be the least powerful console of the three next generation consoles. The CPU is not made by IBM this time around so NEC will take over. Revolution will hook up to any LCD TV or monitor with a double ended Super VGA cable.

There is something coming out called WiMAX which simple name for IEEE 802.16D and 802.16E. It's basically a wireless Metropolitan Area Network that'll appear around July in some parts of the world including Wisconsin. Basically the ISP puts up a huge broadcast antenna which can broadcast Internet packet-based Ethernet to a group of 30 or less people depending on each user's subscribed through-put. It's the least expensive wireless broadband Internet capable of 2 Megabits for each subscriber.

The range is approximately 25 miles away from the source, and all the user has to do is put up an antenna similar to a UHF antenna, but much smaller. The technology is “Doppler resistant” and most likely being available for cities and towns a like. For this technology to have a longer distance there is a need for a repeater broadcast tower to enhance the signal. WiMAX greatest asset is avoiding the phone company's problem of fixing ground cable if it's cut. Most people can install the antenna themselves because it mounts on the inside of a garage or by a window for example. The antenna is 802.11B compatible which means there are no cables involved from the antenna to your PC or PowerPC. WiMAX is also known as “radio internet.”

New games: Xenosaga 2, Paper Mario 2, Metroid Zero Mission, Winning Eleven 8, XGRA, Street Fighter

On Tuesday, I bought a new Playstation 2 or “PStwo” instead of a PSP. My reason is I have 67 PS2 games in my collection so instead of not having a console to play it on – now I have two. I have bought a SCH31001 PS2 (NTSC v1.1) meaning it's from the 2nd set which made it off the assembly line in early 2001. Anyways, I gathered the 150 dollars needed to buy it and $50 more needed to pay for Xenosaga Episode 2 – Beyond Good and Evil. I liked Xenosaga Episode 1, and I'll play Episode 2 one of these days. It could be in my next entry or might not.

After I got back from Toyriific and Target, I went to ShopKo in a different town in the same day. I don't ever do that since it's too time consuming. I was in Target and was looking around (the crazy part is I owned all the good games on the shelf) so I bought Street Fighter Anniversary Collection. The game comes with all the Street Fighter 2s ever made and Street Fighter 3 Third Strike (previously only for Sega Dreamcast) You know I own the Guilty Gear games so that made me want to buy more 2D fighting games. This game has been out for a while, and got to $29.99; 10 dollars less than last time I saw it over at Gamestop. Some people agree that Street Fighter is the greatest 2D fighter in existence. Me, I don't know yet. I have to experience the game more. I wasn't into those games until 2003. The other game I bought at Toyriific for $20 (with tax) was Metroid – Zero Mission (a 32-bit remake of the 8-bit Metroid.) Two weeks ago, I played Metroid via Metroid Prime so I'll beat this version.

I've never made it far in Metroid, and was killed by jumping into the electric platforms 10 minutes in the game.

I felt I needed to buy a Mario game so I have bought Paper Mario 2 – The Thousand Year Door, plus the front of the case said “Best Seller” on it, and thought maybe Paper Mario is worth a try. I know what you're thinking; Paper Mario is a kid's game. It's hard to find a game you really want these days. Well, there is Gran Turismo 4 coming out on the 22nd, and Devil May Cry 3 coming out March 1st. I own the first installment in the series by the way.

Today is Saturday and I was on Carthaton Electronica for a good session of the morning. I played Street Fighter Third Strike on PS2 via Street Fighter Anniversary Collection very early in the morning. It was good fun! Randy would love this game! It's better than Guilty Gear X2: Reloaded for Xbox. It's strange because I own the other two Guilty Gears (I haven't gotten to those two yet). And yes I worked more on the book in Visual Basic. Hyper Street Fighter II is a clean fighter with none of that all show no fight game play direction most 3D fighters play like these days and it started with Soul Caliber on Dreamcast.

I can do all my school work electronically so I have the assignment listed on a webpage on the Internet, and I'm suppose to do 3 or 4 steps in each assignment. WITC even has a forum I'm suppose to anticipate in where I suppose to post one assignment. I'm starting to know read how loops are possible.

About 8:20 AM I hauled in wood from outside near our basement door so that there would be wood stacked inside. I volunteered to make my dad happier, and it only took my dad and me 10 minutes to fill the wood box up. Wood is free where we live so it does best in the fireplace! Randy just woke up when I called him afterwards, and I told him I got Street Fighter Anniversary Collection because he likes Street Fighter games a lot. He wants to buy and play Gran Turismo 4 because he loves cars so I told him to meet me at Wal-Mart at mid-night on the 22nd.

It's going to have rally racing in it and I really like rally (FRA).

Game to add too list:

- Metroid – Zero Mission
- Extreme G Racing Association
- Winning Eleven 8 (Pro Evolution Football 4 in Europe)
- Paper Mario 2
- Street Fighter Anniversary Collection

Picked up some new games | looking though baseball card collection (2005-02-24 07:28)

Hey, did you know I was a baseball card collector before I got my first videogame? Astonishing isn't it? I had a quick look at my 4 books full of cards ranging from Upper Deck to Topps. Baseball cards aren't worth anything now-a-days. They're worth less than old videogames though. From my point of view baseball cards are colored cardboard that isn't worth anything unless you sell them. I'm not going to sell my cards, but maybe hand them down instead. I was going to have a complete list of every baseball card online, but after typing every player in MS Word for three pages front and back I got tired of it and stopped. I know that I own have a few full baseball card sets. Half the collection I have is the more expensive Upper Deck kind.

Upper Deck is the most expensive baseball brand and was that way for 15 years. My cousin had a baseball card collection too, but his is only half of mine. He has 2 books and I have 4 books plus a sealed package of 1996 Upper Deck MLB cards. All together I probably get $150 – I don't know. I do know I was collecting cards from 1990 - 1996 so that's 6 years. The cards were in the book the entire time; however, I can not prove that they were out of the book. Actually, I could sell all four books for at least $150, but I won't because I have no need too.

X

I've installed my new hard drive in my computer today. The WinXP installation CD only could partition 133 GB of the 200 GB on the disc so I used Partition Magic 8 on it and it remade the master boot record so Windows could partition up to 187 GB and the hard drive properties dialog box thinks 60 GB used when my PC first booted up! That's confusing. Now, I only have 125 GB to work with. I reserved 8.5 GB for a Linux partition by using Partition Magic 8. One possibility is the partition zero filled 60 GB of the hard drive!

When I let Windows partition the hard drive, it partitioned the whole hard drive, but filled 32 % with 0000000000.

X

I looked on the Gamerankings.com and saw that Sega's upcoming 2D RPG; "Shining Tears" scored a 66 % average. Yow! So instead of doing Shining Force now, I'm going to purchase Ys VI - The Ark of Napishtim that got a 77 % average rating. It's much like the old SNES role playing games, so it would most likely be bought by nostalgic gamers. There is one at Toyriffic that was talking about how he wants to own all the Japanese RPGs, and other rare videogames. I am not that nostalgic as him I am sure. They're pricing Atari 2600 for $90! Sure, the store has good deals on current generation games, but I wouldn't pay that much for old games even if it's in high demand by collectors. Some of those games if the manuals are in good shape (like my N64 games), they'll charge a ton of money of them.

So at 2:40 PM yesterday I went to get Gran Turismo 4 for $50 so I have that now. Then I went to the Toyriffic to pick up a Ys IV because I didn't see it at Target. I don't know if it was a rip off or not, but I bought Castlevania - Harmony of Dissonance for $40 same price as Ys. I liked Castlevania - Circle of Moon somewhat well so I bought the sequel. Circle of the Moon was my first Castlevania game. Harmony of Dissonance is my fourth Castlevania. I was thinking of getting Super Castlevania IV for Super NES, but I wasn't too sure about it. It's an old game and there are games I want for current generation. Although being able to own one of the most popular Super Nintendo games of all time in itself makes me want to own it someday. This game has Simon in it too. He's been in 4 Castlevania games: Castlevania, Castlevania 2 - Simon's Quest, Castlevania 3 - Dracula X, and Super Castlevania IV.

At home I got mad about not having friends admitting that they all alienated me. I remember in Calvin Academy I left there all those students were listening to rock music and I knew I didn't like that stuff (until later when I started to listen to the heavy metal more often) so it took a long time to get to know some of those students. Then I left there in 10th grade and the point is I feel that everyone alienates me.

But that's a long time ago. Thinking of the past is not good. I also got a pack of 15 DVDR spindle for $11. I use them for data only unless I was going to make copies of DVDs, I don't use them. For example for the last month it took me one month to fill up a CD with mp3s and programs. After a while I felt better about being in my room all day playing my games or doing homework.

Actually, there were some high school students that were going to play paint ball and they were in high school. I didn't know why there were 4 cars parked by my house that's why I was curious about it. The group left apparently.

Last night I played Castlevania - Harmony of Dissonance on the Game Boy player. You take the role of the grandson of Castlevania IV's Simon Belmont, Juste Belmont. The guy looks dead because he's as white as a ghost! Vampires are usually pale white which makes me think he was a vampire at one time. Ever seen the movie Blade? Sort of like Blade himself. This is my second 2D Castlevania since Circle of the Moon. So it plays like Circle of the Moon for the most part. I'm not too sure about the music, but the game play is there, and the game's graphics even looks like Castlevania. IGN said the game play was outstanding and I agree with them a little bit otherwise I wouldn't have purchased it. It was fun. The guy had the game beat and the boss was saved in one of the spots so I'll just keep it that way. I have seen the end of Harmony of Dissonance. Apparently, Juste's girlfriend got all the blood sucked out of her by the boss vampire, and Juste wants her to live again. I mean all that time he was trying to save the girl. I tried to beat the boss at the end and he kicked my ass the first time out of two tries and both times he hit me with his lace time and time again until I die. It took me 2 minutes to die, because ill-prepared and ill-skilled. His health gage was 10 % depleted when I died. Like any final boss he's hard. Apparently I can't cheat neither because there are no codes for Harmony of Dissonance. It has a lot of color use. Looks like twice as much as Super Castlevania IV. On gamerankings.com HoD got an average of 87 %, but IGN (my most trusted review site) gave it a 92 % and that's good for a Gameboy Advance game. The graphics were a 9.0 for a GBA game.

I'm thinking I'll be buying the videogame called Mercenaries tomorrow. Mercenaries is developed by Pandemic Studios, the same developer which made Full Spectrum Warrior for PC and Xbox. You play a Mercenary who gets paid and an arsenal of high tech weaponry to go to North Korea and doing some US SEAL's missions except the US is paying mercenaries the cash instead of soldiers. I don't think there are game retries; it'll revert back to the last saved game. These ex-marines get the job done for money. They only hope to get rich by doing private missions, in this case killing General Song of the North Korean Militia. In the game, there is a lot of blowing up stuff sort of like it was in Far Cry. This game got 9.1 out of 10 with all 9s with IGN's review. Gamespy gave Mercenaries a 100 % or highest possible score

Games to add to list:

Castlevania - Harmony of Dissonance

Mercenaries

Maxthon is my favorite IE Clone! (2005-03-01 14:40)

The Internet is really dependant on web browsers these days , and I say why trust your browser usage with a 4 year old browser open to viruses and Trojan Horses (also viruses). These viruses can easily download themselves from an unused computer , and usually the user cannot delete these viruses with a simple press of the delete key. I think this freeware alternative called Maxthon is a stable alterative. It's the most popular at Downloads.com. The advantages of this browser is it turns IE6 into a tabbed browser with popup blocker, custom skin plug-in, search engine textbox, ability to download swf (Macromedia Flash) files to the hard drive once thought impossible with Internet Explorer 6. The browser shows your IP address on the bottom right of the application too.

For diehard Netscape users I recommend Mozilla Firefox 1.0 Final, Mozilla's next generation tabbed browser. It is very stable, never crashes, takes care of 95 % of popups, and runs on minimal system resources reducing the change that your computer will crash.

However, the Problem with this browser is you have to download Quicktime, Suns java, macromedia flash to it separately. That's not a big problem for broadband users because it has a wizard /auto download for these plugins, but modem users would be bothered by the download times. Even without the plugins you don't need them for most sites. Mozilla Firefox is more stable than the latest Mozilla release. One big thing that Mozilla Firefox is that it gets full support by any Linux. It's Gnome's desktop internet browser of choice. There is also Konqueror, KDE's primary Internet Browser. If Linux's primary internet browser is Mozilla than you can trust the Mozilla Foundation to bring out a quality internet browser. Netscape used the Mozilla source code for it's 5x and 6x versions, but Netscape released 7.0 when Mozilla Foundation became independent from AOL/Netscape. Netscape 7x is still free, but Mozilla is a better browser of the two.

I hear it's true that Netscape uses Mozilla's free source code in their most recent web browser, so basically Netscape 7.2 is a replica of Mozilla 1.6.

We'll never know because Netscape 7.2 isn't open source.

Both browsers allow you to download java with the browser.

It's hard to make a recommendation, since they're both very popular downloads and both are on my computer. I prefer Firefox unless it's absolutely necessary that I use Microsoft Internet Explorer. If that's the case, I use Maxthon.

For loading times both applications load instantly because I have 2 GB of RAM, so I never have multitasking issues with 2D applications...ever. My guess on slower machines less than 1 GHz, Firefox will load a tiny bit faster than Maxthon. It's not a big issue because both applications load almost as fast as Internet Explorer. It also depends on how much your hard drive is filled up.

For those computers with only 20 % free space on their hard drive, multitasking and loading times will decrease by a couple seconds.

I saw Tekken 5 on the Internet yesterday, and it came out 3 days ago according to IGN. The latest Tekken game is suppose to rival Virtual Fighter 4 Evolution's graphics because IGN rated the graphics a 9.5 out of 10 meaning Namco pretty much exercised the Playstation 2's hardware to the limit. The game play exceeds Tekken 4 in quality. I hear the DVD has Tekken, Tekken 2, and Tekken 3 as freebies a long with it. So you're getting four games in one package. Four times the fun...as soon as I own this game. See, I was planning to spend my money on Devil May Cry 3 except that now I found out that the American version of normal plays as if it was the Japan's hard setting, I might wait a couple weeks until I pick this one up because I don't want to pick up a game that I do so badly it's not playable by me I mean.

Then for some odd reason I got into Puff Daddy - I'll be missing you. Yeah, I know it's R &B, but you know...nobody can hear me anyways...my parents weren't home last night.

I brought over 13 videogames over to his house. After we took turns at Grand Theft Auto San Andreas. We raced Dodge RAM vs. Toyota Lightning on the dirt courses and he won in Gran Turismo 4. Then we raced muscle cars in New York and one other city course. We played Street Fighter III Third Strike. I beat him 3 times and he beat me once.

When I was playing Mega Man 3 we planned to go into the city to Best Buy to look around. I am mostly a software person so I like the PS2 section and PC section and he and his girlfriend looked at the surround sound speakers and audio players for cars. I really didn't care because we also went to the Game Stop nearby. I didn't see Ys VI because it was sold out so I left there not buying any videogame at all. I went to Game Crazy (in Hollywood Video) for the first time. Game Crazy didn't have it either. The room was basically very cramped. The person there looked like he was from the ghetto or something.

Last night I've been listening to music including Jewel - Hands, Allman Brothers - Jessica, Kansas - Dust in the Wind, Carry On My Wayward Son, Rolling Stone - Satisfaction, Ruby Tuesday, Symphony of the Devil, and listening to trance later in the morning too. I like the DJ Micro - Supernova, Binary Finary - 1999, above and beyond - far from in love, airbase - emotion, runaway, PPK Resurrection, a couple John Digweed/Sasha songs, ATB - Lost in Love, etc.

Which brings me to today. Simply, I have only been on the message boards all day because that's the only thing a man can do when he's broke? Also have been doing a little work in Visual Basic assignments made it to chapter 6. It was hard, but I'm doing it. I may not need a tutor after all!

Invitation to Gmail & couple more games (2005-03-06 08:14)

Welcome to my humble blog and I've been here a good year in which all of you shall recognize this URL by now. On Thursday, I bought 3 expensive games. Yeah, the ones I wanted. I only opened one though by Sunday. I'll start by saying I was looking towards buying a videogame I thought only purchasable at Game Stop. I called ahead for this game. IGN and Gamespy actually made me want the game. Like most things, these sites get me excited about many games I'd eventually buy. Game Stop was out of stock which always means it's a best seller.

This specialist store is also 27 miles away from my house. As lazy as I am, I try to get everything east of the St. Croix River!

I drove to River Falls ShopKo about Noon. I wish I hadn't driven to River Falls because ShopKo stocked neither Tekken 5 nor Ys - Ark of Napishtim. It took me 10 minutes to get out of ShopKo because I was pondering on which games are good from the 50+ selection. I drove 15 miles away to Target where I found Tekken 5 on the store shelf. I also was reading Devil May Cry 3 review off IGN thinking that this is a good purchase. I've paid Tekken 5 with cash and DMC3 with a check totaling $108. I've always liked to chat with Toyriffic people when I'm there, so I went there thinking I'd get a cheap game under $20. I was lucky I went there when 1 copy of this particular game Game Stop sold out of was there. That now makes 71 PS2 videogames. This game was important because I like buying cosmetic RPGs, and is suppose to be better than Shining Tears by 10 points.

When I got home that day and was playing Tekken 5 for the next 3 hours. Actually, one of those hours I was playing Tekken 3 which was a bonus with Tekken 5. As you all know Tekken 3 was critically the best Playstation Tekken and the arcade version was high resolution which is what this is. I am surprised how fewer combos increased so much strategy with all the Tekkens including Tekken 5. I am use to playing games like Dead or Alive which is clearly different. Easy difficulty was like Normal and Normal was like Hard to me.

I've looked on Gameranking.com and saw the game got 9.2 out of 10 on average based on 10 review sites. IGN gave Tekken 5 a 10/10 in the graphics department.

The other two games are still on my shelf. I guess I've looked on the back a couple times to see what the graphics were like. Tekken 5 is my 3rd favorite fighting game next to Soul Caliber or Virtua Fighter 4 Evolution. The same day, I've had Marvel vs. Capcom 2 in my Dreamcast so I was playing that. My Dreamcast controller has seen better days (I've had it for 5 years) and both triggers stick on two controllers. Sega controllers are cheap so after they get dirt in them, something stops functioning. I play rough with all analog sticks in any controller. MvsC2 only used 4 buttons and the D-pad although I am more comfortable with the analog stick since the character's traction increases. The game was fun when my hands were responsive and agile before they slowed down and my winning streak stopped suddenly, and the game got less fun. I had the most luck winning matches with Spiderman, Doctor Victor Von Doom, and Wolverine. I am pretty sure Dr. Doom is a FANTASTIC FOUR villain. (I cheated and looked on Google). If Dr. Doom is here where are the Flame, Invisible Girl, Ben and Liquid Man? Before, I tried Cyclopes, Captain America, and Ryo, but failed to get to the 2nd round. Mega Man isn't an option like he was in the prequel! I'm pissed off now; I wanted to play Mega Man badly. MvsC2 is a button masher. It's very fast, and the music I like. It's jazz and old school R & B mixed as background music for each stage and plays like Guilty Gear.

I was playing that for another hour.

New games: Ys 6, Tekken 5, Devil May Cry 3, Star Wars - Knights of the Old Republic

I've been listening to more trance today like usual with my earphones. Also have been talking on Carthartan Electronica, the treads on this British site are getting dried up because it's the slow transition between current generation and next generation and there isn't enough to talk about. I've been doing quick subjects like "How many games do you buy a month", "Favorite Mario game", "Most informative gaming site", "Favorite MP3 (software) player", and those posts haven't done very well. Maybe 30 - 40 hits at the most.

Oh yeah, I got my new Gmail account at renegadeviking@gmail.com. I don't know what I'll use it for though. 1000 MB is a lot of space, and I'm use to - 1 MB emails. I've got an invitation by Admin of Carthartan Electronica!

Yesterday, I was playing a videogame called Castlevania - Circle of the Moon. It's hard because I get knocked back by the electricity from the skeleton mages. Then there are gargoyles who throw spears at Nathan (hero of Circle of the Moon), and my timing is off. Which is rubbish as the British would say. My timing got better an hour later. Love the music though. It's classic videogame track music. Midi at it's finest....Konami (developer) certainly knows their music. Circle of the Moon is a classical orchestrated inspired Castlevania. I'm about 18.5 % completed with the game. The most I've completed in this game

Today, I am relaxing in my office chair, looking at the boards because I see it as fun drinking 2 Coke cans already today and it's only 6 AM CST! Oh yeah, I've ate a half bag of chocolate covered M & Ms. Not a bit tired neither. I've played Circle of the Moon since 3AM. Then I was writing this entry since 4:30 AM CST.

Right now, I am trying to save up for a Playstation Portable or a 3rd MP3 player called the Archos Gmini. I can't do both. Both cost about $250. I would buy the PSP if it was less than $200 because I'm into games and it's not a horrible decision either. In other words, I really want a Playstation Pocket! No, I'm not getting Metal Gear Acid. Metal Gear Acid takes place in 2025. Konami added a card function to it. The one whom deals the best card gets the best damage. The enemy can deal a better card and get your better card. I might own Tales of Eternia and Tales of Phantasia, both Namco RPGs. My first game shall be Wipeout Pure for sure.

I don't remember the last time I've used my Dual Screen. It stands to reason because I only have one game for it. I've hardly use my mp3 players (iPod, Jukebox) on the go so the reader must see why it's be difficult decision. Yes, I know.... why would I sacrifice food, water, clothes, and housing? You see the exception is I'm getting those free; otherwise, I wouldn't be so motivated getting so much software that looses its value immediately. The value isn't concerning me; it's the technology changing so rapidly in these transition years. I'll keep collecting videogames as long as my income allows me too because it's my choice and all that good decision stuff. It can't be any worse than collecting movies on DVD!

[Extension to original entry]

On March 8th, I went to Toyriffic in search of an authentic Sega Nomad, but the whole set cost $100. A Nomad is a portable Genesis with bad battery life. I was sure the store didn't want me to know that though. I was going to get Deus Ex 2 The Invisible War, but then I saw Knights of the Old Republic setting their on the counter for 17 dollars so I've asked them if I could purchase it for 18 dollars and the kid there agreed so now I own that game for Xbox as well as PC. It's too bad I couldn't bust open the door in one of the ghetto apartments in the beginning where the drug lord is hiding who pleads for his life saying the bounty hunter is after him. Killing him would decrease crime in the entire game and make your mission easier. I've learned of this after reading a game faq. Can't wait to play it!

Game to add to list:

Ys - Ark of Napishtim

Tekken 5

Knights of the Old Republic

Devil May Cry 3

To be Wild Blue user! | Saved up $140 toward purchase of Playstation Portable (2005-03-11 03:37)

Only 2 months until my place gets Wild Blue! Wild Blue is a state-of-the-art two-way satellite service supporting up to 2 mbps downlink costing 70 dollars whereas it'd be a lot more money with DirecWay. We're getting either 1 Mbps or 1.5 Mbps service plan. Wild Blue is bringing the price down further than previously thought possible. Two way satellites use IPv4 Multicasting.

The Satellite

The Modem

Benefits of Multicasting:

Multicasting can dramatically reduce network traffic by sending a single copy of the data.

Hosts can be configured for multicasting without hardware upgrades.

Because newer routers already support multicast forwarding and multicast routing protocols, enabling multicasting on a network is practical and cost-effective.

Multicasting is useful for many types of one-to-many applications, such as the following:

Multimedia, such as video conferencing and collaborative computing.

Automatic discovery of resources in an internetwork (in Windows Server 2003 for example, TCP/IP router discovery uses multicasting by default, and WINS uses multicasting during automatic discovery of replication partners).

Datacasting such as file distribution or database synchronization.

Mobile computer support such as remote address book updating.

Distribution of organizational publications.

Satellite looks exactly like this and will go on top of our house next to our DirecTV satellite.

It's faster than 3G broadband cellular services too which max out at around 386 kbps. The uplink is either 200 kbps or 300 kbps though. Since it's a straight access internet, one person can use all the speed, and there isn't a worry about cut ground wire. To my fortune, my father needs broadband at home for his business. The house is already wired for a second satellite dish. We're asking for the 802.11G (54 Mbps) Wild Blue external modem which will be in my room mounted on a wall. There is no room on my desk for one and plenty of wall space in here. As a backup feature, RJ-45 is installed throughout our basement just in case. RJ-45 is dirt cheap. Wild Blue will be like WiMax countless ways.

After some thought and money to back it up, I am certainly going to buy a Playstation Portable when it launches. The PSP is more powerful than my NES, SNES, Genesis, Saturn, N64, GBA, Playstation, or Dreamcast. Yes, something that's more powerful than Playstation 2 only handheld size! Though it's in some ways more powerful than PS2. Once I said I had over 200 dollars saved up for PSP about four weeks ago when I went ahead and purchased both a PStwo and Xenosaga Episode 2.....now I have 140 dollars saved up for PSP again. PSP costs $250. By the time PSP is launched I'm taking out a maximum of $100. For showing off pictures or watching movies, some portable DVD player's liquid crystal display won't look as nice as PSP's screen. Yes, PSP recognizes JPG, PNG or GIF on a SD card and will resize according to Engadget. I'm trying to be conservative with my saving account as much as possible and this problem where my savings account can't pass $2000.

I've already read Engadget's hands-on review of the Playstation Portable. Engadget suggests it easily feels like a 400 dollar electronic with a good weight and casing to it. The price tag for one of these in USA is now $200. They've brought up the issue concerning the long loading times with games and the noisy UMD drive.

I suppose I can deal with these small annoyances. I needn't to worry about dead pixels on the LCD screen, I've checked already. These turn color to red or black in pitch darkness. I've tried out my Dual Screen in the darkness to make sure there weren't dead pixels. PSP will launch on March 24th. The shipping day is March 23rd. I won't get mine until March 25th.

Playstation Portable Specs

- Widescreen, backlit 4.5-inch TFT LCD monitor with 16:9 aspect ratio and 480x272 resolution
- MIPS R4000-based 333-MHz CPU
- Graphics sub-system running at 166 MHz on a 512-bit bus with 2 MB of DRAM, rendering 664 million pixels per second and 35 million polygons per second
- Graphics engine supporting directional 16- or 32-bit color, lighting, clipping, environment projection and texture mapping, fogging, alpha blending, depth and stencil tests, vertex blending for morphing-style effects, and dithering
(Source: Hot Chips conference at Stanford University)
- Media processor using another 2 MB of DRAM
- 3-D graphics processing using NURBS (Nonuniform Rational B-Splines) as well as conventional polygon rendering
- USB 2.0 port, Memory Stick port, Universal Media Disc slot, stereo headphone jack and WiFi wireless LAN port

Built-in stereo speakers

Rechargeable lithium-ion batteries

I've installed Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction and leveled my Barbarian to level 5 in the catacombs before I quit. I've had this problem with no music playing during the game. Winamp would actually stop making sound after Diablo 2 boots up, but I am getting sound effects in the game. To solve this tiny problem, I booted up my other computer which had Winamp installed and a DVD full of all the music I wanted and had my earphones connected to it so I could listen to music during the game. I haven't played Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction for 5 whole months. I've had retreated from melee fighting many times into my teleportal to safety. I may be a yellow coward, but I'm coward who won't loose his gold. There are plenty of looters around here. You know what happens to shed no fear players? They die and then they leave the game because no one will send a "TP" to them or they leave because they keep dieing when a horde of monsters are guarding their corpse. I don't love this game any less from then I did then. It may have low-res graphics, but because it's a fun multiplayer game which even works over a modem, I'm more than satisfied. There are plenty to do in this game to play all night. Thankfully, I rebooted the PC and the sound problem went a way. I leveled my barb to level 7.

Yesterday, I was playing were Super Mario Bros. 3 on Super Nintendo for the heck of it. That game was most interesting. A lot of classic platform memories here. It is said SMB 3 is the most beloved NES game. It also comes with Super Mario Advance 4, but I doubt I'll get that.

There's no point is there? So I got pass the easiest boss. I've played SMB 3 twice in the pass 4 days.

I am lazy thus I'd been posting reply messages on Carthaton Electronica because I find it fun. Someone gave me minus karma for not being nice to him. What's the subject? Working at a game store, and thinking that's great. I knew who gave me bad karma so instant messaged him asking him why? At first he didn't answer than he asked if he and I were cool. In situations like these you're either right or wrong so I told him go shove it! Yes, I made someone feel bad. I would have felt guilty except he gave me -1 karma why shall I apologize? That karma stained my perfect +114 karma. I've more karma than everyone put together on Carthaton because I've had posted about 35 game reviews and am the only other person besides the administrator with a 5 star rating. This particular guy lives in Ireland where games cost a pretty penny.

Devil May Cry 3 plays better than any one in the trilogy not because IGN gave it a high score, but since it truly does a remarkable job at balancing AI with Dante maneuvers. No one is getting cheated out of their money here. There are plenty of challenges ahead to seek in DMC3 #1 being staying alive when it would seem impossible to do so. In fact, I haven't made it very far at all.

It has heavy rock music so I was bothered by first, but what bothers me more is the unseemly difficult game play. I admit my skill level best when it comes to racing. This makes some other games I thought were difficult look like a pussy cat compared to this. At least the graphics and cut scenes were great and saw Dante get pierced with a sword each time he gains skills. Nothing I haven't seen before in the first game although more frequent in DMC3. It's been so long since I played DMC. The game looks gothic, but I've suspected this (reviews told me about it). This game is more consistent than DMC and I'd be died if I were unfortunate to backup against a wall. The best thing to do is to go berserk 95 % of the time (keep moving & pressing the action button). I've picked gunslinger as my skill choice. Pretty good game all and all. I've heard Devil May Cry 2 was not up to par in graphics, game play or sound, so I'd skipped that game entirely. Okay, so what if it's only $20! No sense buying a bad sequel, right?

I've at least earned 1 credit from the Visual Basic class. All I had to do in the first few chapters was follow the books instructions and copy files to new folders via the program. I missed a couple steps so I had to retrace my steps and got it right the second or third time. I've haven't uploaded a RAR archive to the school in three weeks so I did that yesterday as well. Sometime doesn't feel right though. Either I haven't been reading enough or not retaining the information or both.

I wish there was something more to do than set in front of a computer or videogame all day doing homework or blogging or playing games. I will have to figure something to do tomorrow. I hardly watch local TV anymore.

[extension to original entry]

Today (03/12), I did extensive reading online and was pondering about which games I wanted again. I bought 5 games today (only 1 used) including Shin Megami Tensei: Nocturne made by Atlus I found at Toyriific (last copy), and bought Full Specrium Warrior (a military shooter) and Burnout 3 (looked fun and it was on the top 5 most wanted games for Ps2), Mario and Luigi Superstar Saga for GBA.

Ramblings of various stuff including PSP (2005-03-16 19:50)

Sorry about the 5 day response time here at Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site.

First off is more news on next generation consoles. I've learned that NEC is only making the semiconductor.

Revolution CPU(s), Hollywood, is still being manufactured by IBM. IBM is also doing business with Sony and Microsoft for their consoles too. IBM has the largest silicon chip research and development teams on Earth.

Well, there is ten days until Playstation Portable gets launched. I'll be excited about buying that. My favorite game for PSP will be Wipeout Pure. PSP is likely to sell out the first day. I'll be able to afford one at the launch.

Did anyone know that I got a 76 % or 22/30 on the Playstation 2 IQ test at PlaystationPro2.com? Well I did. I was excited for a moment there, but I just know the tidbits I guess.

As you might know, I don't concern myself with national problems, today I've made an exception by watching the History Channel where I've learned about private military sectors which were created because it's a way around the public's opinion (who wants a volunteer military). So I was unaware that the American/Arab war in '91 was being fought by the US Army / US Navy / US Air force and private militaries also referred to mercenaries when not included in US military. Unlike the US military, soldiers who work for a commercial organization can come home if the going gets tough, and the American soldier can not. I don't like the private military (which gets paid more than our government's soldier) than the rightful volunteer military because the private sector does not answer to a Four Star General instead he/she answers their private organization's recruiter whom answers to the American military strategically. In any case, I learned that people want to earn more money and take vacations instead of working in the government faction.

On Saturday, I went to my friend Randy's house at 7 PM. It was pretty cold around freezing so I took it slow. His house is in the town of Hammond. It's pretty small. When I drove there, he and I went down to his basement and we played Burnout 3 on PS2. I suppose his dad saw me when I came in the door. In Burnout 3, you race to the finish line like most racing games, but we all crash into each other for points. The several obscure opponents flip your car or crash it against the railing enough it'll eventually explode! I'm not complaining since this is how the game forces you to play aggressive-like. The racing part with car against car of Burnout 3 is the most fun. The other part, crashing into an intersection didn't make much sense to either of us. Speaking of which, I would have bought this game for Xbox, but instead bought the PS2 version. Okay, point here being the head 2 head racing was the only fun part.

Then we tried out four of the PS2 rpgs I haven't played yet. Yeah, these were imported role playing games from Japan which has been translated into English. First off we've played Phantom Brave made by Nippon Ichi. The voices spoiled it, the music was above average, the voice-overs were little cutesy high octave girly voice-overs

The music in Disgaea - Hour of Darkness was a bit crazy, not only above average, I thought the music score was like a cartoon music whomever composed it. The graphics had anime sprites with the oddest backgrounds colorful mixed in with demonic things...weird stuff. Looked dark too, well you play the prince of the underground so everything is evil I suppose. Then I've played Lu Pucelle Tactics. That game was developed the same way and by the same team who worked on Disgaea. You start out in the church and you fight demons. The IGN review spoiled it for me. Yeah, that was interesting. I can't describe it because I only played it for 5 minutes and I don't care to play it again. Then I showed Randy Ys VI (PS2 game) I've bought from Toyriific he and I were looking all over Woodbury for last week. He had nothing to do that day so we went searching to various stores including Game Stop, Best Buy, CompUSA, Toys R Us and Game Crazy.

All and all these games are bad, but yet I love getting the strange imports hoping I'll get a diamond in the ruff one of these times. He likes country so he let me compress his George Strait's 50 Number Ones. I've always liked new music to add to my mp3 collection. It has about 51 of his songs. Country is a change of style instead of fast paced trance I am use too, plus that's what my friend is interested around here.

All this week WITC (Wisconsin Institute of Technology College) has been on spring break which hasn't bothered me because I don't go to college at all, I just send my homework electronically to them. Carthaton Electronica is offline today so I was looking for something on the Internet to do. I'm already ahead in my college technical writing class so I needn't to worry about that for now. I shall work on Visual Basic more, but today, I've been taking a break in between working on homework... a lot of little breaks for that matter. This week I've been learning how to save files in new folders and follow directions precisely. Reading directions precisely hasn't been working out very well for me. Heck, I'm not complaining, because I know I have to rely on myself to get through it, and starting to dread these following directions in the book stuff because I don't like retracing my steps. I NEED DISCIPLINE!

Tomorrow, I get to tell whatever is on my mind (doesn't mean I will though because I can be secretive when there are no rules)! My parents are telling me to be nice, and I might agree with them and be nice to this doctor. He's going to help increase / decrease my meds, but I won't agree with everything he says.

Damn, I need friends now! What can you do? You're all in another state!

I shall go to bed and stop my ramblings for now.

I've made 87 Applications on 1 DVD! WOOT! (2005-03-19 10:04)

About NURBS

Yet's talk about this NURB thing because it's used in Playstation Portable and it's not a polygon which makes it so interesting. It's the official texture of 4D! I mean how can something be 3D and not support polygons? Well, until now, everything was computed with polygons. NURBS (nonuniform rational B-splines) are mathematical representations of 2- or 3-dimensional objects, which can be standard shapes (such as a cone) or free-form shapes (such as a car). NURBS are used in computer graphics and the CAD/CAM industry and have come to be regarded as a standard way to create and represent complex objects. In addition to curves and surfaces, NURBS can also represent hypersurfaces. Most sophisticated graphic creation tools provide an interface for using NURBS, which are flexible enough to design a wide range of shapes - anything from points to straight lines to conic sections. NURBS are compact expressions that can be evaluated and displayed quickly. NURBS work especially well in 3-D modeling, allowing the designer to easily manipulate control vertices, called ISO curves, and control curvature and the smoothness of contours. NURBS are defined by both control points and weights. It takes very little data to define a NURB.

A spline is a usually curvy pattern used to guide someone shaping something large, such as a boat hull. The B-spline is based (the B stands for basis) on four local functions or control points that lie outside the curve itself. Nonuniform is the idea that some sections of a defined shape (between any two points) can be shortened or elongated relative to other sections in the overall shape. Rational describes the ability to give more weight to some points in the shape than to other points in considering each positions relation to another object. (This is sometimes referred to as a 4th dimensional characteristic.)

About Yesterday

Okay, enough about NURBS. Yesterday, I've made an application DVD with all the latest software crossing over 50 data CDs and data DVDs because a lot of programs on 95 % of them are obsolete. I did "tree /f" in the command prompt so I could easily display all the programs I did. With all the applications I ever dreamed up putting on DVD I got 1.4 GB worth. So I added 425 MB of Mp3s. This includes some shareware games, I found out various CDs. This on DVD makes most of my CDs obsolete which is my point. You know of course I put some extra stuff on it that I don't want Modblog to know about. I'm kind of excited here.

I'm thinking I won't need to create one of these for a while. I have 200 blank DVDs to write on and I've only used half one 1. All the applications almost make up 3 CDs! I was looking for other data to put on this DVD, but couldn't think of anything.

Someone didn't warn me about God of War & being a lazy geek too (2005-03-23 18:06)

I admit my last entry wasn't very good. I could copy / paste all my posts from Catharton, but I won't because that's cheating although it would make everything slightly easier. As you know, I haven't spoken to any person on here, because I'm busy, and this is for other people to read. I update 3 - 5 days regardless of the circumstances. Everything 3rd or 4th day I get really excited, because it's "blog entry day!"

On Sunday, I went to the videogame store and bought Devil May Cry 2, walked back to my truck, and thought, "Do I really, really want this game? It's only a 7/10 game, but it would complete my Devil May Cry trilogy." Deciding I'll never play DMC 2, I've refunded it at the store & spent more money on two extra used videogames. The first purchase was Baten Kaitos Eternal Wings and the Lost Ocean. That usually means it was returned very quickly after first purchased. I remember reading IGN's review the day before I bought it which also had an effect on purchasing the game. That now makes 31 Gamecube software purchases since September 2001. I couldn't say games because of the Sonic Mega Collection & Zelda Promotional Disc multiple games thing. Back then, it was true Gamecube didn't have more than Sega's Skies of Arcadia Legends and Lost Kingdoms in terms of role playing games. According to IGN, the graphics were a 9.0/10, the game play was 8.5 out of 10, and the sound received a 9/10. The other game I'd bought was Final Fantasy Dawn of Souls brand new for Gameboy Advance. I already own Final Fantasy Origins, but now I've Final Fantasy I and II for two different platforms. There is something about Final Fantasy I on a Gameboy Advance which makes the purchase worth it. Not only do both games inside Dawn of Souls feature better graphics than Final Fantasy III, it is 20 dollars less Toyriific's asking price. If I didn't buy Final Fantasy Dawn of Souls; I could have afforded "God of War."

I've asked when the store is getting Valkyrie Profile (super rare and popular PS1 videogame), and Phantasy Star Collection for Gameboy Advance. Neither game existed at the store. Everybody seems to want Valkyrie Profile for Playstation which is my point. People either want it because it's rare or because it's a Tri-Ace game. My expert opinion is customers want it because it's rare, and the one whom has it can brag about it! Wanting the game is very simple to comprehend like the phrase, "if it quacks like a duck, looks like a duck, it must be a duck (an endangered species in this case)" or "Behold this rare specimen, you have nothing! HAHA!" The 2nd part sometimes ticks me off more if I know which developer (team of game developers who form a company) which made the game. The store thinks it can get $80 bucks out of me, well, I can get it cheaper off EBay, and whoever figured that out before isn't dumb. I don't blame the people who work there since it's not their fault game prices were steep, they just sell the games to customers. If only I had a credit card, I could start bidding off EBay which will never happen this year or next year. What's this God of War for PS2 which has created quite a stir in the videogame world? Third most phenomenal videogame of all time according to Gamespy? In my point of view, no way! It shall not top Legend of Zelda Ocarina of Time, Super Mario Bros 3, Halo 2, Halo, and Unreal Tournament 2004, Half-life 2, Goldeneye 007, Perfect Dark, Super Mario 64, and in that order God of War got a lot of 10 out of 10s....graphics 10/10? Game play 10/10? Sound 10/10? See, I am smarter than this. Half-life 2 got a 12.10/10, and it looks so much better than God of War which doesn't mean much to Gamespy apparently. According to Gamespy's review structure, the game shall top the charts due to one person's point of view of a game for any system. God of War may not be one of greatest videogames (like the review sites from IGN and Gamespy) ever although I can't deny the game play is better than 95 % games out for PS2.

I might sound like I'm a rich fellow owning all these big releases when they first come out, but in reality; I'm pretty much broke as far as walking around money. My mother was making a condition so if I go to Target today and get a videogame of my choice, she'd reimburse most of it and it'll be in my Easter basket this Sunday or almost free. I'll probably choose God of War for PS2 sooner or later. I was going to get Digital Devil Saga which is hugely popular at Toyriific for some reason because it's another RPG I probably won't play. It would be the third mature RPG I've bought as of yet (first one was Fable for Xbox, second one was Shin Megami Tensei: Nocturne), plus I'd rather get Atelier Iris Eternal Mana the 2nd game published by Nippin Ichi America (first was Phantom Brave), but introducing a new developer, Gust. It's another one of those strategy RPGs like an old Command & Conquer game. So far I have all the Nippin Ichi games which made it to the US. Why would I buy this graphic deprived game? Answer: looks like an old school RPG (SNES style) in my house, so it must appeal to people who remember the 16-bit era.

I've this strange feeling that games for Playstation 3 will not be on BD. Videogame file size won't need anything more than DL-DVD. In fact, Xbox 360 is keeping the DVD-ROM drive without upgrading to a HD-DVD-ROM drive. It's much cheaper to add 2 discs in games which need it than add the more expensive HD-DVD-ROM drive in every Xbox 360 like previously thought. Heck, for the first year, in my opinion, most Americans won't own too many next generation discs (HDD, BD), so being able to play the current DVD media on Xbox 360 will be acceptable by most Xbox gamers!

Yesterday, I was playing Mario Kart 64, Mario Kart Double Dash, and Wave Race - Blue Storm. I didn't get 1st place in every race in Mario Kart 64! That's because I'm not perfect at it, but back when I was 13 - 15 I was a lot better. It was possible for me to get 1st place in all of the 150cc tracks. One time I've lost the lead by getting rid of a red shell which came back and hit me. The other time, I was second and I didn't get a blue shell at all so there was no possible way to take back the lead. Mario Kart 64 does these little idiosyncrasies I use to play this game a lot when I was growing up to an adult. I've played the Star Cup at 100cc. Did you know I use Action Replay on games I don't care about? Well, I've added a code that unlocked everything in Mario Kart Double Dash so I could finally play the locked tracks, and I've also got Toad as one of the four unlockable characters. I've played as Toad and Bowser Jr. in one grand prix, but I'll favor Yoshi and Princess Peach (also Toldstool) over all characters. Laugh all you want. I've had a gut feeling that the new Rainbow Road lacked design and a decent soundtrack. Nintendo could have had done a better job remixing N64 version of Rainbow Road. I wonder what tomorrow's videogame shall be? Devil May Cry 3? Dark Cloud 2? Mario and Luigi Superstar Saga? Gran Turismo 4? Prince of Persia - Sands of Time? Who knows?

The same day I did something stupid, I installed the Longhorn Transformation Pack 9.0 from soft32.com. It's horrible. I remember installing LTP 6.0 and it did the same thing. First, it made my ISP connection really, really bad, slower then normal. Then it would use a lot of system resources and make everything slow. Everyone, take it from me, do not download & install that free Longhorn Transformation Pack 9.0. SO GOT THAT!

I've drove back to Toyriific today to buy Tony Hawk's Underground 2 and Tony Hawk Pro Skater 2x (as in THPS 1 & 2) for Xbox. I've thought this over and made a vow I'll own all the Tony Hawks for Xbox which I've fore filled. I was surprised that THUG2 was only $25. The franchise got its reputation on Playstation so might as well own the last two to complete the series. Prior to this, I've thought heavily on either buying Saga Frontier 2 or Threads of Fate because both are made by Squaresoft. As my options got better, I've finally let those go of the thought entirely. I was also pondering on paying $30 for Square's Breath of Fire for SNES, but I would never play it, and in reality it was over priced in my opinion which in reality is only worth $15! It did have something to do with graphics by the way....

As for the final WITC writing project, I'm brainstorming a formal evaluation and research report which is due next month. My thought was doing something obvious like DVD collecting at home or why Pentium 4 is better than Athlon 64? Something simple like that because if I'd ask something like what ping do you have at home? I'll only ask the technical influenced people instead which is why I do the survey at school where everyone knows about Internet bandwidth and them stuff. In my opinion, surveying internet between cable, DSL, or dialup as one of the choices isn't a great idea because it's too broad of an answer, plus, I know for a fact that high-speed Internet users out number dialup users 2:1! People with dialup are always the ones who don't care about the Internet in the first place. Those people don't need high speed to get a few tasks done. I, on the other hand, tend to be an internet junkie where high ping throughput is very important.

New Games: Tony Hawks Underground 2; Tony Hawks Pro Skater 2x; Final Fantasy Dawn of Souls; Baten Kaitos -

Eternal Wings and the Lost Ocean* Also showing bloggers all Tony Hawk games for Xbox

That's all for now. Come back in 3 days.

Easter was great until someone stole my game & downloaded Laxius Power II & III (2005-03-28 16:56)

On Friday, Randy and I played Vs Mode in Super Mario Bros. and he won and I gave his money's worth at it. Randy had made it to World 8-3 because he had found a secret beanstalk in World 5-1 which only appears when invisible squares are hit. Then we went to Perkins in town to eat dinner. I had a juicy bacon cheeseburger with fries. I've tried to talk about IRC (internet relay chat), IM and videogames, but he doesn't like those things. We've been friends for a long time so I liked spending time with him and his girlfriend, just not in the restaurant. When we were in the Target parking lot, he pealed out because a couple of teens were looking at him funny. His ego was really big on Friday. Randy is a person you can kid around with. So we went inside the store and picked out God of War for a full $50 and saw the PSP on the shelf for $250. This means that I don't have to pay $150 more for a value pack having games I don't even need. I didn't buy the PSP, but may purchase it next month when $185 dollars is added to my checking account. That's next week everyone! It is what I want to have by the way. So we've got back and played World Series Baseball 2K3 at my house. He chose the Oakland Athletics and I chose the Minnesota Twins. The Twins won because I kept advancing the bases which he hadn't learned to do early in the game, but he also made a big come back doing the same thing I did to him. On the front of the controller, the 4 buttons represent the bases and the player can advance using the buttons. We haven't figured out pitching styles yet (fast, screw, insider, and wine-up). There were few bugs in this game, outfielders controlled extremely well. It's the 2nd best baseball game for Playstation 2. The best game is EA Sport's MVP Baseball 2005 from what I saw ranking wise. EA Sports delivered a better game than they usually do.

I've treated yesterday like an ordinary day until I got my videogame stolen. Since I now have a satellite in my room, I was watching a horror flick called "The Grudge." The grudge is a dead spirit that eats people. Actually, it didn't scare me a bit except the grudge's first appearance in the film which sent a chill down my spine. I was fascinated the movies setting which is in Japan. Of course, the main character is American exchange student. The grudge eats people who come to its house. Actually, there were 2 grudges in the end. If an existing grudge eats someone; that person becomes a grudge. In public, the grudge looks like an ordinary person and can't eat anyone.

Then I watched Goldeneye. The first thing I noticed was the film is a lot different than the videogame for Nintendo 64. The movie was entertaining. Boris was a funny character. He's the Russian nerd who wants to be a genius, and says, "I'm invincible" whenever he hacked into the CIA database & that time right before he was frozen with cyanide when it fell on him. Of course when the computers are inactive he pretty much pounds the monitor to death. It's probably the 2nd best 007 film starring Pierce Brosnan. It's not as good as 007 films starring Sean Connery. I've none of the old James Bond movies on VHS.

I've brought the Gran Turismo 4 DVD in its case and the disc was stolen by the only person who could have stolen it - my cousin. I'd caught that Tekken 5 disc was missing, and he told me to check home to see if it was in my other PS2 which was true. He didn't want to play Gran Turismo 4 when I asked him for that reason. The fricken smart ass.

After the NCAA basketball game, my dad, Uncle Jim who lives there, my cousin's husband, Jim, and my other cousin's husband, Jeff. Everyone was playing "Phase 10" (card game). I've joined in for a bit, but kept losing so I went home to check every single case for the missing disc. And I went back to see what if Josh happened to return there or if the disc was on the floor in the room the console was hooked up in. However, I called his place to talk to him, but I'd got a hold of his dad instead so I asked him kindly if he saw a rogue disc lying around to call me back, and I'll have the answer today. I remember being furious about it and checking every single case it could be in. I am not a person who puts games in different cases out of laziness. It looks like I'll have to repurchase Gran Turismo 4. First stolen videogame since I gave a former friend Diablo 2 to copy it, and had it stolen at his house!

Anyhow, I am re-downloading Laxius Power II because I couldn't find it. Laxius Power series are freeware games inspired by Final Fantasy II, Phantasy Star II, and Suikoden. According to the site, a group of people got a little crazy with RPG Maker 2000 making it look like Final Fantasy II. The game play is barely professional, but playable. It does have a battle system which looks like that of Final Fantasy I in Dawn of Souls for GBA. I also downloaded Laxius Power III, and added these games to the new freeware section to my videogame list. This is my 28th major update to the list. All these games are at the Laxius Power Homepage.

Spent 310 dollars today on PSP + PSP game! More details inside! (2005-03-29 22:57)

Today, I've thought I had a chance to meet this woman whose name was Nikki at Subway, but she hadn't showed up. We've talked to each other Friday over the phone apparently she knows me from high school, and saw my dad at the pharmacy in Econo Foods. Dad described her as thin, blonde, tight jeans, athletic, and soft spoken. I was polite over the phone when she asked how I liked WITC. Truth is I haven't been interested in meeting girls at all in my whole life. I'm an only child so that makes sense to not really care to be around people all the time. I can't even picture this person in my head; however, she can picture me in her head apparently. Today was beautiful out, no snow or rain and 70 degrees with sun shine. I may call her tomorrow. She wanted to see me, and it didn't seem like she'd was there to alienate me like a lot of other students from high school. Damn alienators. I wasn't exactly the brain (nerd....yes, brain....no) in Renaissance Academy and was shy in high school, but some of that has changed. I knew I was above average in my skill of writing....why else would I do a blog? I love blogging by the way. I didn't know anyone at high school cared anymore except Randy (best friend).

I've drove to the bank before 2 pm when I was suppose to meet this woman from high school, and withdrew $270. The bank teller didn't recognize me so I gave her my driver's license. There is something about not seeing me before which makes me a stranger there. Grrr. I wasn't about to go a tangent explaining I was there before. It's not that important....just a bank visit...many people come here every day. Next, I drove straight to Wal-Mart in Hudson, and wasted no time walking to the electronic section to buy a Playstation Portable value pack. Then I've bought Wipeout Pure. A console is no good without a game. I was looking for the Nyko rechargeable case Game Stop sells (water resistant case with extra lithium battery to extend battery life.) IGN verified on a full charge, PSP would last me 3 hours & 32 minutes. Lithium batteries also loose their ability to retain battery life as they are used often.

The value pack included:

- Black PSP
- Miniature earphones
- Nylon carrying case with the PSP logo
- 32 MB Sony memory stick Duo
- USB cable
- Spiderman 2 movie UMD
- Game Demo UMD
- Lithium battery charger
- PSP directions

Okay, after almost spilling Mountain Dew on the PSP after I took a photo you see, I almost had heart attack, but the bottle was empty, so I was relieved. I've experienced Wipeout Pure now. The graphics are great, but I've been having trouble controlling the vehicle if you call it that using the d-pad. The soundtrack is dance music, yeah! So that's alright. PSP only takes a special kind of memory card called the Memory Card Duo which is thinner so my other memory cards I use with the camera won't work which is a shame. I was going to try out putting MP3s on PSP. Sony didn't package a USB cable that fits into it's tiny slot, but luckily, I have a digital camera which has the same USB cable so I just took that and added it to the PSP packaging box, no problem-o.

you see the PSP packaging box and God of War. See how the PSP box is still in excellent condition? I wish I could say the same for my Dual Screen box LOL

Conclusion: I can deal with 2 dead pixels and a missing USB cable. PSP is great. Now I can play it all the time if I choose to do so. My next PSP game will be the next highest score on GameRankings.com, Lumines, the above average puzzle game from Bandai. My friends at Toyriific prefer Ridge Racer over anything else because it got good reviews even though Wipeout Pure and Lumines had better reviews. I don't need extra games. They're not worth it so all and all Wipeout Pure was worth $40. I suck at it because I hardly spent anytime on it. MP3s transfer threw the USB cable great. I've been listening to some songs like Gouryella - Gouryella, Sasha - Xpander, Sylver - Shallow Water (Cj Stone alternative remix edit), and Chicane-Autumn - Tactics (Thrillseekers Club Mix). I've thought Gouryella sounded the best on the small speaker & is exceptional song by the way. It has a good beat to it. There is no equalizer on the PSP, but that feature can be over looked. It wasn't meant to take over as a MP3 player, but makes an outstanding photo wallet. Right and Left triggers do the pictures.

If I had a choice whether or not I would buy it or wait a month until money was added to my savings account, but I've been waiting a long time for PSP to come out so I just had to get one out of curiosity and anticipation. I usually pondered on a good portion of the day and if I actually needed a PSP or not yeah know? One thing is for certain; it was a good feeling when I finally got one. Interesting enough, I only saw only 1 PSP missing from the enclosed glass shelf, and it was that way for a reason. The handheld is more than an Xbox or Playstation 2 even though they too are behind glass. Did I make the right decision? I know I'm not in debt, because I paid for it in cash meaning I won't get in trouble with the bank, which is why I pay videogames in cash.

Now there isn't a big deal wondering which one is better (NDS vs PSP) because I own both now.

- Okay, we all know it's more expensive than NDS. Was it purchased worth it? Well, in my opinion it's a dumb question because I'd purchased it. Right now there is no way not to pay less without the UMD movie which isn't a important factor anyhow.

You install the battery back in the PSP which snaps into place and put the lid on afterwards. Then you install the memory stick duo which is the only card that fits inside a PSP. Then you turn the thing on and set the time, date, settings, login name for WiFi. Then the UMD disc goes in upside down with the label facing PSP's back so the flat part faces upwards. The PSP automatically reads the disc inside unless you hit the small home button, it'll go the boot screen

Boot Screen Settings

Network update - I don't know

USB connection - after you press X button, a drive shows up on the PC so drag and drop files can occur. Pictures go in the PSP/PICTURES, MP3s go in PSP/MUSIC, MPEG 4 goes in PSP/MOVIES

Video Settings - has settings for audio language, subtitle language and UMD volume

Photo Settings - has an option of how fast you want your slideshow to be

System Settings - Date, Time, Language, Format memory stick option, nickname, Battery information, option to restore default settings, PSP BIOS version (v1.5), About SCEA

UMD disc - plays game

Memory data - displays basic game saves on memory stick duo transfers to other PSPs wirelessly option to delete saves

Media options

Music - plays MP3s, AAC and can shuffle the music, display the file size, but not the bit rate. Option to delete music.

Movies - NA

Game - displays the game saves on the memory card. Gives you an option of transferring them via WiFi to another PSP or deleting them. Also shows the file size of the game save

The UMD game I've bought was Wipeout Pure. The vehicle controls awkwardly because you play the D-pad which is standard issue and fair quality. You've 2 triggers to drift your vehicle more closely in a sharp turn, X to accel, square to brake, triangle to rare view. I think the graphics are PS2 quality on the LCD screen. You might disagree and believe PS2 games look better, not on a handheld though. The sound is cd quality and it sounds better wearing earphones, not on the speaker.

The sound must be an 8.5 because the small speaker is in stereo and it's loud, but not crystal clear. It must be a standard issue speaker inside PSP.

The UMD drive is not electronic so you can get the UMD out after the battery is dead. Lesson learned by the faulty PS2 tray drives, plus you wouldn't want a electronic lid on a handheld which Sony knew already. That's a plus

I give PSP a B+ on average.

Pros

- graphics are really good
- download Game saves over Internet
- upload Game saves to other PSPs in the area using the WiFi feature and not sneakernet
- sound is really good
- WiFi game saves to each other
- full charge occurs in 25 minutes
- recharges while hooked up to power while playing game
- Plays AAC audio.
- option to turn off LCD back light in boot screen under System Settings
- storage space on UMD is plentiful
- non-electric UMD lid
- memory card has 32 MB instead of 8 MB
- shows FMV
- volume control buttons on front
- acts as photo wallet; supports JPEG only
- plays your MP3s almost as well as an iPod
- LCD dims when not played to save battery life
- when you shut it off in the middle a game & when you turn it back on, it'll be at the spot you shut it off at.
- games priced at $40 and not $60

Cons

- D-pad only for games
- analog pad is crap or gives bad performance
- battery life ?
- Need Nyko Rechargeable case
- price point
- value pack gives you unnecessary stuff like UMD movie unless you want to watch

Here are the top Playstation Portable games at the moment.

YEAH! I HAVE ONE NOW & IT'S GREAT! I'VE BEEN WANTING FOR THIS FOR A YEAR NOW!

Dated with 20 yr old from high school | Bought Lumines for PSP | discusted with USA boarder controls | Why not call white people Caucasian instead? (2005-04-03 17:53)

To fill you in, I've called Nikki back at her house (whom was supposed to meet me by Subway last Tuesday) and she was going to a coffee shop by Target. Problem is I didn't know there were two Subways in town. That's my fault. So on Friday morning, I woke up an hour before noon and drove 15 miles to Hudson, walked inside the coffee shop. Before I did, I did a little trim work on my beard so I would look better than most days.

Well, Nikki was wearing one of them skirts with long see through socks. Her personal appearance didn't look bad at all. She's taking chemistry at UofW River Falls. So I asked her if she is an alchemist. She didn't fancy that in a good way. So I told her she was good looking, and I never sat by a woman my age since who knows when. She smiled which kept me from leaving. Then there was a group of other people in the corner chatting a way, bugging me because I hate talking those who disturb my thinking patterns in public and people's eyes also wonder (mine too). Regardless, I've shown her cat pictures, dog pictures, computer room pictures, flute pictures via Playstation Portable's LCD and also showed her Lumines and suggested she play it. Nikki refused to play it because she said she doesn't play videogames. The trance music I had on PSP also made a negative impact. Yeah, now everyone in the shop knows I like that music which probably had more negative than positive impact on my charisma. O-well. She said after 5 years I hadn't changed much intellectual wise. I didn't know if that was a complement or some way to tell me that I was the unwise teenager she use to know. I didn't respond. I'm wise enough. She looked like she was doing high grade algebra in that math book. I was getting wary if that meant something or not.

Oh, I was thinking what my Sim would do in this case? Unlike in The Sims 2, I didn't flirt with her, had no reason too. I tried to explain to her how you play a Playstation 2, and what "role playing game" is. Battle scenes in RPGs are hard to describe. She knew that Magic was role playing. I hate Magic the Gathering & have neither played nor want to learn to play it. I may have sounded silly explaining why a few games like Diablo 2, Half-life 2 and Gran Turismo 4 got high scores via internet reviews. I shall have brought screenshots of role playing games like Final Fantasy X which would have helped immensely. Well, it's not important now. I can't imagine anyone who hasn't seen a RPG videogame, but I can't assume she knew how to play PS2 already and didn't admit it. If she was lying...that would make me very angry, because it sounded like she was lying about not being involved in videogames too. I've decided it won't hurt to go along with it a little bit longer.

Any woo, I kept starring at her thin (athletic) legs when I rubbing my chin in thought as I was trying to avoid saying "Your legs are pretty". . She's not the prettiest woman, but decent looking none-the-less. She doesn't get on the Internet that often so she's not that great with computers. I'm a computer technician, and I tried explaining that my classes, I was typing commands in the terminal (she didn't know what that is), but I did mention Linux to her. I said it looks like Windows with minor differences. She didn't know what Linux looked like. I told her that I miss everyone at high school, and I want to meet them. I'll meet her again tomorrow perhaps. There is one thing I couldn't figure out....what kind of date does someone do homework?

Saturday, I went to town to buy Gran Turismo 4 again. The funny part is I didn't wait because my parents didn't want me to call Josh again. I've spent $100 on Gran Turismo 4 and only $20 on Gran Turismo 3. I wanted that game back so I could play it, but Saturday was a complete waste of time. I won't complain. I've constantly thought about the missing DVD.

Shoutcast via Quintessential Player 4.51

I didn't do much other than listen to Shoutcast's Digitally Imported (24 kbps MP3 stream version) on Quintessential Player while I "enabled stream saving." Playing MP3s off my hard drive saves a lot of through-put over the 56k modem. It stands in for live audio channels, and the result is you'd get much higher quality sound off your hard drive than you would with internet radio. QCD will not overwrite mp3 files which stream twice or more which doesn't make me mad, it has never happened to me yet. It would take me 20 seconds to delete them otherwise.

Oh yeah, I've been playing Lumines, a well designed square Tetris game for PSP. I've paid $40 for it. That makes two PSP games within the first week of ownership! The game has 16-bit dance music I've heard this on my MP3 player, but not on a handheld platform since Wipeout Pure. It's a vocal one, and I don't mind it, Lumines is addicting. I've made it to level 7 before Game Over. There are many skins you'll earn, but I'd rather it play more than 1 song each 4 levels. The trick is to drop the squares when the squares below disappear so more squares disappear and bumps up the score.

I was looking at the screenshots of Dolwin (Gamecube emulator) at <http://dolwin.emulation64.com/> and have been wondering where I could download the GCMs (Gamecube Media) file format? I've found this site called <http://ngc-isos.de.vu/> where I can download GCM files if I download that kind of data. When I get Wildblue broadband, I'll download a whole game and see if it works on the emulator. I believe the emulator is slow because I haven't installed Direct X 9.0 which DolWin 0.10 requires to run at 100 %. Some ways, I don't see the need to emulate. I have a Gamecube, and I don't play it often anymore, and own 31 game cases (with more games) for it. Personal computers today don't have the processing power to make Gamecube games run at 100 %. It'll be another couple years before we achieve 100 % emulation. It's much like how Nintendo 64 games run at 100 % since 2002 depending on what the graphics resolution is at.

Dolwin running Pong demo on my computer.

It was another one of those sleepless nights. Last night I watched Sinbad - The Sailor (old movie from 1947) on the American Movie Classics channel. The movie wasn't very violent which made it some ways uninteresting according to my tastes in films. I could tell that all the sets were fake did wondered why Sinbad mentioned Aladdin and his lamp. I've thought Disney just made that movie up...didn't realize it was actual myth. The stars weren't even Arabic; they were pure white or Caucasian like me. Is the movie racist or not? Shall I even care? I'm use to seeing mostly white people on TV so I am well aware we're not in control of the world like centuries ago. I might as well be racist to terrorist because I hate their guts. However, that doesn't change the fact I've been born into a race which historically had done many of man's greatest achievements. With everyone created equal under the constitution, whites shall know what we're categorized as.

This has nothing to do with Spanish-Mexicans trying to live in our country illegally. I don't know anyone who isn't pissed off at the government which hasn't found a solution to the problem yet. A wall blockade between us and them would be unconstitutional according to Mexican President Vicente Fox. I don't give a shit what he thinks. Let's leave it as that. The ironic thing is I visited Cozumel, Mexico just 12 miles off the coast of the Yucatan Peninsula in 1999 and went scuba diving there at a nice resort (first and last time too). I saw a passenger plane wreck underwater. Americans vacationing in Cozumel enjoying the tropics, clear skies, and white beaches would drastically decrease as result of wall blockade. Vacation spots are Mexico's key argument to convince Americans to vote for keeping the southern geographical borders open.

Videogames to add to the big list

- Lumines

Bye.

Program review : Part 1 (2005-04-05 01:41)

I was going to post the most rememberable posts at Catharton Electronica, but I'm saving that for next post. The selection I have doesn't look quite right, and there are 88 pages of posts from me alone so I'll be searching hard for only the best ones for everyone to read. Meanwhile, look at my first batch of program reviews. I've done this before at Ian1984's Software Blog, but didn't feel like looking for new program versions today or any day the past month. I'll be looking for new versions for eternity if I kept that up and wasted more time than I am on the gaming boards. By the way, a new strategy RPG from Japan is coming to Toyriific (the store that has all the videogames in stock other places don't) on Thursday called Atelier Iris Eternal Mana which interestingly got a 9.0 out of 10 at Gamerankings.com before it came out from a site I've never heard of. I'll be checking this site regularly for changes. Read the only Game Review available!

I've also been wondering about how much time I've spent on Catharton Electronica.... writing all those videogame replies is indeed addicting never-the-less all good things come to an end. Knowing I've learned more about games makes it worth it. Not now, of course, how else would I get information I need to post on my favorite blog?

What would make life interesting is if I owned a videogame every gamer wants just like old Nintendo software even if I'll never play it to the end. The colors in graphics were a lot fewer 20 yrs ago, but games hadn't got any easier just more complicated (more buttons anyone?) I haven't played a PC game (Half-life 2) since January. I've pass the part where Gordon armed himself with a handgun for the first time than I got lost in the Underground Railroad area & shot down by a helicopter sniper. The sniper and I died at the same time. I was ranting about this game a couple months ago and now almost completely forgot about it. Anyways, I know I've lost valuable game collecting when I skipped the earlier consoles all together.

Although not positive, I am pondering if I shall buy Super Castlevania IV for $25? Yes, I could get it cheaper online, but I am probably going to afford it next time I pick up Atelier Iris. What's so special about it? It was extremely popular during the 16-bit era, and it also came in a Genesis version known as Castlevania - Bloodlines. The rumor is Konami took all the aspects of the previous installments and improved them until nothing resembled quality in side strollers as much as Super Castlevania IV (©1991 Konami) for action platformers. The point of the game is killing the "impaler" at the end; none other than Dracula himself. It provides enough challenge to be interesting, but is easy enough so that it doesn't become frustrating.

Tomorrow, I might just go to Hudson to meet Nikki again. She's the woman I visited last week. I could also stay home and be unsocial which is what I'm good at. I've haven't seen Randy in over a week. He's the one who visits me & we chat about me, or look around at electronic stores in the cities. We talk about my job as a computer technician. He knows little, I wish there was someone who knew more so the communication between us would be better.

Program reviews part 1:

Mozilla Firefox v1.02

Features 10/10 popup blocker, tabbed browsing, small download

Stability 9.7/10

loyal meter 10

codec support 10 JPEG, GIF, PNG, SWF, JS, BMP

Javascript support 8/10

Macromedia Flash Support 5/10 Need to download it

JPEG 2000 support 0/10 not supported at all [tears rolling down eyes]

Comments: Started using in 2003 and I love it. Use it everyday on the Internet. Coral Paint Shop Pro 9.1

Features 8/10 makes excellent cropping images + effects browser + awesome intelligent decolorize PNG codec exclusive to PSP 9 codec 8/10 – uses advance PNG codec. Professional grade JPEG and GIF codec. Also creates JPEG2000 images.

Stability 9/10 pretty stable. Doesn't crash on Windows XP

loyal meter – 10/10

Comments: Use it to crop my images all the time or do text effects.

Irfanview 3.95 features 6/10 – free image viewer that crops images saves them in JPG, PNG, GIF, BMP. Slideshow images full screen codec supports 10/10 – extremely advance PNG codec and pretty good JPG codec too for compression. Having them is reason alone to have this program on your computer It's free too!

Stability 7/10 runs great with pictures, but often when viewing MPEG it crashes.

Quintessential Player 4.51 features 9/10 - skin support, stream saving support for MP3, OGG, WAV, MPEG, AVI

loyal meter – 5/10

supports following codec supports MP3, MP2, OGG vorbis, AU, WMA, WMA9, WAV, MP4, and HC-ACC

Stability 9.5/10 stays functioning forever if you'll allow it.

Comments: Use this program to stream save PLS files off the Internet. Otherwise, it's another Winamp that's no longer supported.

Maxthon Browser 1.21 features 9/10 supports browser skins, everything IE supports, popup blocker, small download too

codec supports JPEG, GIF, PNG, SWF, JS, BMP stability 8/10 pretty good, but not close to Mozilla Firefox. Better than IE6 by far.

MS WORD Professional 2003 features 10/10 great spellchecker, grammar checker, image inserter, greatest True Font support of them all.

loyal meter – 10/10

stability 9.5/10 great stability

Comments: Used MS Word for as long as I can remember.

The handy VideoLAN 0.81 media player

Features 8/10 It's a full featured video player that pans any kind of video to full screen. Something that's been overshadowed by Windows Media Player and Winamp 5. Also allows the user to host a server to stream compressed audio or video to other computers in a LAN or by Internet. Open source project. stability 9/10 had no problems with it yet on Windows XP.

Namo Webeditor 6

Features 10/10 - HTML made easy, better than Dreamweaver because it never crashes. I can make Tables very easily. Good Stuff. It's a graphical user interface one too. Dreamweaver enthusiasts hate it, but I love it.

loyal meter – 10/10

Stability 9/10 rarely crashes though not perfect, but what HTML editor is besides MS Notepad?

supported codec 10/10 If it's on the web....Namo would support it.

Here is the bandwidth survey I'm giving every one at school. It took me about an hour to type up.

VERSION ONE: What is the Best Online Gaming Bandwidth of a PC with several players over the Internet?

1.) What is your Internet Service Provider?

2.) What is the least bandwidth you can get a way with for playing a 3D Multiplayer? First Person Shooter online with low latency?

3.) How much money would this ISP charge for the provided bandwidth?

4.) How often does your connection ever go down?

- a. Once a week
- b. Once a day
- c. Once a hour
- d. Once every 3 days

5.) Does satellite Internet affect online games to the point where they're unplayable?

6.) Do more advanced 3D online games take more bandwidth than ones a few years ago (example a reliable connection to play Half-life online vs. playing Half-life 2)

7.) Are you happy with your current giving bandwidth?

8.) Do you wish to upgrade you're bandwidth at home?

9.) What's top dollar you're willing to pay for Internet access?

10.) What games do you play online over the current connection?

VERSION TWO: What's the best bandwidth for the average high speed user to get all tasks done?

1.) For someone who wants to either download small programs (between 20 to 60 MB), and surf the World Wide Web or listen to streaming audio through Winamp or Windows Media Player at 128 kbps streaming audio connection for an example, and surf the world wide web at the same time? What's the minimum bandwidth would get all these accomplished?

2.) What's the best service provider for 1 Mbps connection

3.) What bandwidth would the user need to be able to stream a 192 kbps audio session?

4.) What's the best service provider for 512 Kbps connection

5.) What chosen ISP disconnects the least?

6.) What chosen ISP disconnects the most?

7.) What bandwidth would be good if two people want to serf the web at the same time

8.) Would you upgrade the connection if next step up is cheaper?

9.) How much do you pay for you're current bandwidth?

10.) Are you an Internet Explorer, Netscape, or Mozilla user?

Hi, you almost lost me for one second there... but I'm glad I didn't click away. First, I enjoyed your post, and second, maybe you can help. I don't know how much blog spam you get but I get tons on my blog. Most of the time I'm talking about used surfboards stuff because I have a used surfboards website, and people post all this junk with their links and stuff. As blog owners, I guess we'll always be subject to the unethical and inconsiderate. Well, hopefully it's not driving you to crazy... Good luck partner, enjoy the positives friend.

Hey Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site...

How did you get your blog to be so good? Originally I was out trying to locate surf board related information, but your post ' Program review : Part 1 ' got my attention and stopped me in my tracks :) Glad I found you because I'm trying to improve my site about surf board and your blog here gave me some excellent ideas. Thanks Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site for the good read and I think I'll mention your blog to my cousin (if that's okay...)

Keep up your effort and good job.

Well, is there something a little weird going on here? I don't know about you Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site, but my blog gets pretty cluttered with spammy comments from people. My advice to you as one blog owner to another, is to be patient and focus on the great things about having a blog, instead of all the junk that goes on. You do have a quality blog and appears that you enjoy it. My favorite web project so far is a used surf board site, because I have total control and it makes me a couple dollars here and there. It's pretty hard to find new information on used surf board stuff though. Hey, keep up your excellent job Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site, and good luck with your projects..

See ya

Aloha Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site,

I'm a visitor from Hawaii and just found your post Program review : Part 1. I like it... it's interesting so I decided to read and say hi. Although my interests are mostly about surf dvd related information right now, your blog got my attention and was a nice change. Thanks for your nice blog Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site, I think I'll tell my cousin to stop by if that's okay. Aloha Great post Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site, without blogs like yours I would be miserable and bored. My recent injury has me cooped up at home, so it's always lucky to find a gem like your blog here to keep me amused. My used surfboards website is getting better but it's hard to find information on used surfboards stuff, so I like learning from quality blogs like yours because it helps me in my web projects. You do a sweat job my friend. I'll be bookmarking your site in a special place. Will probably tell a friend too.

Nice work

Well Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site, quality blogging comes from people who put the energy into their blog like you have. It was a nice change to land on your blog, lots of others are junked up with useless comments and information. I put a lot of energy into my surf board site, so it does pretty well with surf board stuff. I think I'll re-create my blog because I like what you've done here and want mine to be more like yours. Thanks for the lesson in good bloggin. You get a special bookmark :) have a fantastic day..

Atelier Iris moved back a month | Dicussions at Catharton Electronica in two days (2005-04-08 21:31)

Yesterday, I drove to Toyriific to pick up Atelier Iris - Eternal Mana. Atelier means "Painters" and Iris means "Colorful." We've named our black cat Iris. In reality, the game is translated to "Painter's Colors: Infinite Magic", the sixth installment in the long running series. I've found another review of the import at RPGfan.com because the import review was translated to English, and the North American version is similar because the text is converted to English. Unfortunately, Atelier Iris Eternal Mana 2 is coming out in Japan next month meaning the prequel was delayed a full year and Atlus (the publisher) won't publish the sequel in North America. It's coming out on May 25th so personal preference you know.... The enemies' intelligent tactics, HP (hit points), and MP (mana points) equal my party's HP and MP thus increasing the difficult a lot and can be frightening this way.

Stella Deus - Gates of Eternity is coming out April 26th both developed and published by Atlus. This particular game looks like the other isometric role playing games, except all the new ones are strategy RPG.....weird eh? It looks good enough to play; I could always use another isometric game in my collection.

In River Falls, Great Clips just opened shop and I walked inside to get myself a new stylish haircut. I remember shaking my head no a lot than shake my head yes. An old woman came in and started talking about stuff and looked at me in a odd manner, and the quintessence was my ego was higher than normal, and I held back my thoughts....for I didn't think of anything to prove my point in time....saw new faces...heheh. It might be a delusional thinking side effect of taking 10 MG of Ritalin in the morning and 1 MG of Risperdal at night. I've a chemically unbalanced brain. Medication always has side effects.

Afterwards, I walked down the slope to ShopKo to look at ESPN MLB 2K5 selling for only $20, but after some difficult decisions, and never bought it that day. I decided to drive to the videogame store where I found the former black man who I gave a photo CD a month or two ago with videogame photos on it, and one time I'd decided not to except his invitation to meet at his house so I lied saying my name was Dan because he was curious why I gave him the photo CD months ago. He didn't understand the photo CD had no value to me whatsoever. I didn't want to know him, because I made a choice not to know him before, and I rather not get involved again so I walked out. I get the funny feeling he knew I lied to him.

I have 40 hrs 48 minutes of trance music on my external HDD and 6 ½ days worth of MP3s total. I've been collecting since 2000. This may not be as huge as some peoples, but having dialup this must mean its above average, right?

Today was beautiful out yet I didn't go anywhere. I've been working on the writing assignment, thought up the survey questions in my mind & posted a memo on the discussion board at WITC.edu. Next, I called Toyriific in Hudson to ask if the store had Super Castlevania IV in stock, but it was so good someone else bought it so I'll erase Castlevania IV from my list now. The other game also sold out was Tactics Ogre - Knights of Lodis for Gameboy Advance which balanced a high score of 8.8 out of 10 on Gamerankings.com. Last time I was there the store had 2 new copies of this game. It's supposed to be a great real time strategy game and looks so much like Final Fantasy Tactics. Afterwards, I'd looked up Gamerankings.com scores realizing that Splinter Cell 3: Chaos Theory is out on Xbox and averaged 9.5 out of 10 so tomorrow I'll buy my copy. My purchase of Stella Deus for PS2 won't be for another 2 weeks; therefore, it won't hurt to spend my cash on another excellent game.

On Catharton Electronica, I have had a discussion about if Dreamcast was truly dead. First, I went on saying Dreamcast was dead, because you know it's dead in North America. It's like people saying Atari Jaguar is not dead because Songbird Productions keeps releasing games for Jaguar / Jaguar CD. Publishers aren't releasing software for the masses. I don't see Dreamcast games in Wal-Mart(s) anymore, because it's obviously dead. It was a head of it's time and it also died long before it's time, but we can't do anything about it no more except play the Dreamcast games we already own. Other gamers on the thread I've known for months were saying that Dreamcast is alive in Japan where a new game comes out for it each month. Sega has an arcade circuit board called the Naomi which is slightly more powerful than Dreamcast so programmers could easily port game code from Naomi machines to Dreamcast in a matter of weeks. The popular 1998 fighting game, Soul Caliber, was a Naomi game, and the Dreamcast version sported improvements like more realistic character skin, and improved background textures without increasing number of polygons. I went on saying since Dreamcast is a 128-bit platform and is including with the 128-bit generation. However, I could buy used games from Toyriific and Dreamcast wouldn't be dead. In Japan, Sega Saturn hadn't died until 1998 when it was made obsolete by Dreamcast. Sega was the 3rd to launch a 32-bit console in the United States after the Sega 32x in 1993 and Atari Jaguar in 1995; Sega rushed development of Project Blackjack to be 1st launched 128-bit console in the USA. If Sega had waited longer the Dreamcast could had been more profitable if only Sega hadn't lost so much money on Saturn. Dreamcast could have been more powerful than Playstation 2 which would help Dreamcast sales. People who only want to best graphics available would buy it, and more games would be developed at the same time meaning more launch titles in 2000.

For example, I've had purchased Marvel vs. Capcom 2 for Dreamcast for $50 two months ago (because it's very rare to get not online), and the disc looked slightly used yet it played like new. I could say I've bought it when it came out! An unopened Dreamcast jewel case would double or triple the price of a used game, but I don't care about those. It's unwise to pay for an unopened game for a dead platform.

Secondly, I learned a bit more about the harder Japanese Super Mario Bros. 2 for NES. Although the game was only released in Japan, I found out I had a copy in form of Super Mario Bros. - The Lost Levels. MushroomKingdom.com had a segment about the real Super Mario Bros 2 and showed screenshots. We had the discussion here. I was never able to find a ROM of this rare NES game.

Thirdly, I've had a funny comment on why Playstation Portable had a coin-sized battery in it because it's true it used it when the lithium-ion battery below a certain percentage. For example, I have a TimeX digital watch I've bought in Jamaica and only needed to change the battery once, because I used the backlight a few hundred times. Clock batteries last as long as 5 years. My logic lies in how long BIOS coin-sized batteries last.

Afterwards, a popular topic was how Playstation Portable 2 functions like. I've contributed my part saying its probably backward compatible with PSP. The UMD discs would be dual layered and hold twice as much data as its predecessor. The PSP2 would have better battery life too.

New Games: Splinter Cell 3: Chaos Theory, ESPN Major League Baseball 2K5, Lumines, Wipeout XL, and Wipeout 3. Will be added to list shortly...

[One day later] Randy wasn't available to visit me today. I've woke up early today, and looked on Internet game reviews. I planned on buying ESPN Major League Baseball 2K5 by 2K games and Splinter Cell 3: Chaos Theory for Xbox. I believe I told why in the previous paragraphs. Heck, I saw Wipeout 3 for 7 bucks and it had some exceptional dance music according to the reviews. The soundtracks included music from DJs: Sasha, Chemical Brothers, Cold Storage, and Underground. I was excited to get so I could play it and rip mp3s. When I got home, I remembered to read the Gameranking's review structure of Wipeout XL receiving 4 100 %s (wow) and 94 % from IGN because the dance music was brilliant according to them and I like trance anyways so it was well worth the $8. I will encode them into MP3 by CDex at 128 kbps 44 Hz because I don't believe the original music was higher than that bit-rate in the first place! In fact, I'll do that after I get done writing this entry for sure just because. Before I went I was getting into Wipeout 3 and I've already heard the songs "Underground - Tin There" and "Sasha - Xpander" which were cool enough. I do listen to them everyday on my PC. All and all, I am really happy with the current decisions I've made.

P.S. : My parents don't know I like trance as much as I do.

Here's the trance music list.

Wipeout XL

Intro FMV music

1. Cold Storage - Xylem
2. Cold Storage - Phloem
3. Cold Storage - Argen
4. Cold Storage - Xenon

In game music:

11. Paul Van Dyk - Avenue
12. Propellerheads - Lethal Cut
13. Chemical Brothers - Under the Influence

Before long all these songs will be on my HDD. WOOT!
That's all for now. Bye.

Bought Jade Empire + two Genesis games | SVG in Mozilla 1.1 (2005-04-13 17:11)

8:40 PM Today

Comment: Looks like a lot of people like games or are curious. I write for free.

Today, I've heard of this next generation vector image format called SVG and Mozilla Firefox ver. 1.1 is going to support it. In my humble opinion, Firefox 1.1 shall also support JPEG 2000, but I'm not saying anything. No body on the web uses JPEG2000 even if I want too. My observation is it's more compressed than PNG or GIF and is an alternative to flash web technology Modblog would need to support a SVG html tag for me to use it on this blog. SVG in Mozilla Firefox ver. 1.1 It seems it can be used as a stationary vector graphic too, but the big question is....will it be better than PNG?

You know I like to go around the Internet at old videogame vector graphics and coping it to the clipboard so I can reduce the file size less then one half it was originally without reducing color. It's harder to do this with Irfanview, but a lot easier with Paint Shop Pro 9's PNG optimizer. Afterwards, I over write the PNG using Irfanview's PNG codec, the file size is instantly reduced 1 - 4 KB. That time I gave Stuff5 the improved file size of his logos compiled in PNG and later he told me he wanted them to be compiled in GIF so I changed the file extension, but he found out about it. It's an excellent way to trick file transfer protocols that won't accept PNG into accepting them. Also works with MP3 files, give it another extension like *.ZIP, but be sure not to open it in WinZIP or WinRAR or Powerarchiver. PNG is only better than GIF if you own a program released after 2002 else it would be equal to the compression of GIF. The early PNG codec before 2003 were worse than GIF. I use General Public License's Portable Network Graphics for all my vector images.

Screenshot of Jade Empire for MS Xbox

Well, to my surprise Jade Empire for Xbox came out today to a store near me and sold out before 3 PM. IGN gave Jade Empire an exceptional 9.9 out of 10....only 0.1 point from perfect in every way. Gamerankings averaged 9.4 from ten popular game reviews. I was trying to find out what the bad seed in the game was. I'm 5 dollars short in money otherwise I'll buy it at Target next week. Target said it's coming out next Wednesday. What makes it stand out is the fact it's 0.1 point higher than Halo 2 (previous best game for Xbox.) In one's own opinion, Halo 2 could still be the greatest game on Xbox. That's not the point I'm trying to make here. Jade Empire being an action RPG while Halo 2 being a first person shooter. It uses the Star Wars - Knights of the Old Republic's lock-on system instead of light sabers you'll get Chinese weapons like a polearm for an example, but plays similar to KotOR. It could quite possibly be Bioware's best game to date. Bioware's previous best sellers were Neverwinter Nights (plus all the expansions), Knight of the Old Republic 1, Baldur's Gate 1 and 2 (and expansion packs) for PC, and one other game. I've played like mad on Neverwinter Nights in the summer months of 2002. NWN has this deal when you connect to someone else's server; the administrative gamer of it has all rights to your character on that server. So when my ISP disconnects me I can't find the server right away, and when I do find it, my character is gone because the administrative gamer deletes all low level characters like myself thus all that time wasted building up my inventory for nothing, and the game's replay value is shit so I played the game the whole summer in 2002, a few times in 2003, nothing more. NWN would make an excellent LAN game for two brothers (or sisters) who own copies and play it together. I have none which defeats the purpose of multiplayer which isn't cool at all. The game had a bug where you can rejoin the game and your game would be reset so all the weapons in the chests, and drawers would be full once again. I'll do that ten times so it's possible to sell all the items in my inventory & buy plated armor from the silversmith.

Ninja Gaiden (NES) unlocks once you beat Ninja Gaiden (Xbox)...what an awesome bonus feature!

Anyways, I read the Ninja Gaiden Xbox review just for the hell of it. It was great reading. I found out it had the best graphics of any game for Xbox. I remember it being very, very hard. Too hard for my tastes. GAME HAS DROP DEAD GORGIOUS GRAPHICS! It's a toss up between Dead or Alive Extreme Beach Volleyball, Ninja Gaiden and Jade Empire. I believe once you've beaten Ninja Gaiden, you can unlock the emulated 1989 version of Ninja Gaiden. After I read the IGN review, I read Flying Omelette's review of Ninja Gaiden which scored 9.5 out of 10. He mentioned that the textured looked muddy because there was so much of it. It's amongst the writer's favorite NES games.

I've lost the concept of enjoying playing multiplayer. I haven't played an online game for so long now. I must have been a part of an online game preferably a first person shooter, but my ping is too low. Yeah, I was thinking of playing either UT2004 or Counterstrike: Source online! I want to kick ass and take names too.

Also yesterday, I had nothing to do so I'd installed UT2004. I've found my missing Play Disc after last time I've played the game so there is no need for a "no-CD crack" patching UT2004.EXE any more. I like games running in ultra-high-resolution. Remember, I've a Radeon 9800 XT so it does the job well. I am preferably not using sniper rifles for now which is useless for me at close quarter combat. The sniper rifle can be the game's most deadly gun when in hands of a veteran (whom rarely misses the headshots...ouch.) I prefer the machine gun and other automatic weapons. Before playing, I've added 35+ deathmatch UT2004 maps one by one in the parent folder. While playing, the trick is to keep moving and strafing backwards while shooting. Other noteworthy advantages are never fight to the death in my opinion, unless you've only got 10 health points than take as many with you as possible. I shall be the leader faster keep by searching for health packs until my health is 80 % or above than kill as many bots or players as possible by strafing while constantly moving around. If you can't find the opponent (it's a sniper when the HP decreases 40+ points at once....rush for cover if you can)...It always works to start shooting in 360° counter-clockwise rotation until you find the player. Hopefully you'll down him before he (or she) downs you! Always keep an eye out for the blue shields. I want a blue shield (enhanced melee power) rather than a yellow shield (extended health points). UT2004 makes you really want to kill everybody in site in act of revenge, and that's why it's popular. X-fire allows you to bring up a chat window in the game for instant message a friend in whole another game to join you in your game. That's excellent! I do have an X-fire account, but I don't use it anymore.

Time to get back to Visual Basic homework. I've been stalling my tasks lately. For some reason I've been interested into the NEC Turbografx and Sega CD. If I were to buy a Sega CD, I can not use my existing Sega Genesis to hook her up. I've heard that the best game for it is either Shining Force CD or Advance Dungeon and Dragons - Eye of the Beholder which both scored an A at VideogameCritics.net. Otherwise, Turbo GX's best games are either Bonk's Adventure or Galaga '90. Turbo GX was the first 16-bit (and least powerful of 16-bit consoles) in the USA released in 1989. It really makes you wonder how successful Nintendo would have been in America if a SNES CD became available in 1993 like planned. Of course, in the fine print, Sony had the rights to the SNES CD so all games had to be published by Sony even if the videogame was developed by Nintendo. That deal never made it into production. Toyriific in Hudson sells a Sega CD with Genesis for $50 or Turbo GX with game card for $80. Right now I'm pondering which game I shall buy. I am wondering if Toyriific has any of the excellent titles in stock for them.

Look at this....Jade Empire...already!

7 hours and 14 minutes later I've called both Toyriific in Hudson and River Falls to ask the clerk(s) if he had a Sega CD in stock with Genesis and both stores did. The Hudson Toyriific sold them for $120 and the River Falls Toyriific sold for $80. Both said the store(s) would give me $2 in-store credit for my Genesis v3. See, the original game plan was buying a Genesis version 2 and Sega CD separately. It cost me $80. My Genesis at home won't take Sega CD add-on. The person on the phone was the black man I choose to not like so I didn't drive there at all. Instead, I called Wal-Mart to see if the store had Jade Empire for Xbox which they did so I've drove 15 miles to Hudson, WI. They asked me for my driver's license so I gave it too them. The game was rated M for mature. So I got the limited edition Microsoft only sells at the beginning. Best Xbox Action RPG to date, people and I OWN IT! Afterwards, around 4 PM, I arrived at Toyriific again so I could pick out a game. I was looking for some current generation games, but I figured I've got everything I wanted that's out for PS2, Xbox, and Gamecube anyways so I started to ponder which Sega Genesis games I wanted because Sega CD isn't worth the purchase because there is only 2 games I've mentioned above good for it and Shining Force was also in cartridge format. All Shining Force CD had over Shining Force was Full Motion Video and some 16-bit audio soundtracks, but what was on the cartridge version was already above average on Genesis's not good sound chip. Everybody wants Shining Force for Sega Genesis, but I was luckier. Someone sold a whole bunch of imports to Toyriific and one of them was a vintage GUNSTAR HEROES THE BEST SHOOTER FOR GENESIS PERIOD!!! I've paid 40 bucks for that and another $10 for Vectorman with case and manual. That now makes 6 Sega Genesis video games. If I've found Alien Soldier there which I didn't; I would buy it in a New York minute. Some of the imports will still be there tomorrow; I might go back and snag some more after I found out which ones are good via the Internet. New games to add to list:

- Jade Empire (©2005 Bioware)
- Gunstar Heroes (©1997 Treasure)
- Vectorman (©1995 Blue Shift)

Regards, Ian

Never, ever lie on your resume, even if you think the truth is something that will never be discovered. If there is something in your past, you are not proud of, simply do not put it on your resume. You never know if the potential employer could somehow find out the truth.

Me quitting Catharton Electronica forever? Could well be the case! (2005-04-17 21:52)

This time, I'll make it short...none of this three pages long crap. I knew Doom 3 for Xbox was 3rd best First Person Shooter (FPS) after quality Halo 1 and 2, and I started it like I was confused, but that's false. I've this game for PC and it fucking has better graphics than the Xbox. I wanted Knights of the Old Republic because I'm not stupid and that's what I had bought. Graphics are always better on PC unless it's an old game.

I'm thinking of quitting Catharton Electronica. The whole place is full of Nintendo fans, and you can't tell them that the game sucks or they'll go crazy on yeah. I had a War online...it only lasted 6 hours, and I was outnumbered by Nintendo fans. You must understand in the UK Nintendo is doing very badly except for maybe Gameboy sales, so they like to favor Nintendo any way possible. I had created a Playstation Club where Playstation owners can go and be a part of a club. You feel like a compelling force when there is a club. I don't know....I've been there a long time...and posted a lot of gaming knowledge, time spending on my PC wouldn't be the same!

Then I back to Toyriiffic to buy more games like Vectorman 2 and Streets of Rage 2. The case looked very good so that's why I bought it. My second choice would have been Ecco the Dolphin, but the manual was torn up, therefore, no good to me. Ecco the Dolphin is a dolphin simulator; a spin-off genre of the adventure games. Streets of Rage II got a 9.5 at Gamerankings.com, best in the series so I picked that up for $40. Then I've bought Star Wars - Knights of the Old Republic II - The Sith Lords for personal computer (IBM-PC) at Target today. It doesn't look like I'll play it anytime soon with school going on. Why did I buy it? It's the sequel to my favorite Star Wars game! I don't buy every game I want...really! I met someone here who seems to know games well. It seems that the Xbox version got better score by about 3 - 7 points, but I don't need that game for Xbox. The graphics are better on my PC. It looked good six months ago. I've played it yet.

Anyhow, my Genesis RF adapter is almost junk...works enough to play Genesis games. It worked by loosing extra RF Adapters before it in the chain of RF adapters, and the picture quality of Gunstar Heroes got slightly better, and watched the demos. This time there wasn't white pixel interference on the LCD TV. I knew my NES came with a bad RF Adapter so I'll connect that last. Anyways, I enjoyed playing the game. It seems like there is 4 levels in it....is that it? That's $10 per level....expensive for an old game.

In this PNG, you can see my computer specs are indeed 2048 MB. It's blazing fast, and I don't think about it...because everything with 1024 MB was still very fast, it's just a tiny bit faster, unless you're loading games, they load a couple seconds faster.

Yeah, I remember back in the day I had 64 MB of SDRAM.....those were the days :)

PS. I'm getting either Doom 3 or Project Snowblind for Xbox at midnight or tomorrow. Project Snowblind is published by Eidos Interactive and developed by Crystal Dynamics. I'll take a picture tomorrow of my new games because I can't find my digital camera right now, and it be easier just to take one picture now.

I am so tired....it's almost midnight. Tomorrow, I'll revise this post. Maybe I'll post my dad and my research project online which is about financial advisors' client planning. Haven't decided yet if I want too.

Yawn....must stay wake bit longer.....Zzzzzzzzzzzzz.

[One day later] Today, I've gone to Toyriiffic and picked a Doom 3 for Xbox. Then when I found out I couldn't afford it, I've brought it back to Toyriiffic, but found out the store only gave in store credit towards new games so they can sell it for $50 again and rip me off on a used game I buy from them. Last time I'll buy new from them ever again. The little brat said he'd buy it from me used when it's not opened so I took the game back avoiding screwed about of $20! What I could do is bring back KotOR II and get cash back. I don't care if I own KotOR II anyhow. I'll drive to Target in Hudson once I find the receipt I'll reimburse myself. Final word, I decided not to quit posting at Catharton.com...it's a long story. Been there and I have more posts than anyone. I would regret deleting it for that reason

Add new games to my list for v1.31:

- Star Wars Knights of the Old Republic II – Sith Lords (©2004 Obsidian Entertainment)
- Doom 3 (©2005 iD Software)
- Streets of Rage 2 & Vectorman 2 already added

Look at my small Videogame center sectioned off (2005-04-19 01:11)

Unlike two months ago when I had two TVs. I had to give one a way to my dad because now we have seperate DirecTV recievers, we need the extra TV so I have 8 consoles chain-linked using RF adapters while 1 is using the Svideo input jack (Gamecube) because my RF adapter is very bad. This image's pixelsize is resized for your convenience. The DVD player and DirecTV reciever are using the remaining Svideo inputs.

Notice under the Gamecube there is a Gameboy Advance add-on called "Gameboy Player". This adds a nineth console to my TV. Gameboy Advance games are played using the Gamecube controller.

Look at the small white streamlined Xbox 360! | Dell replaced my bad monitor for free | joined new gaming board (2005-04-22 15:48)

Supposedly this is the real Xbox 360. The white image is an Adobe Photoshop enhancement where Microsoft cleaned up the distortion for its debut internet graphic. Xbox 360 looks so 21st century compared to Xbox. The controller is made before Microsoft assigned a logo to Xbox 360. It's been on the Internet since December and it said Xbox 360 on it which Microsoft should confirm next month. Xbox.IGN.com and Gameindustry.biz confirm this is the real deal.

2. All games supported at 16:9, 720p and 1080i, anti-aliasing
3. Customizable face plates to change appearance
4. 3 USB 2.0 ports
5. Support for 4 wireless controllers
6. Detachable 20GB drive
7. Wi-Fi ready

Today was exciting because I got a new Dell CRT monitor for free. The previous monitor lasted 16 months than the screen went died. I had my dad call order another one because he bought the personal computer in 2003, because he called from his office, he would have an easier time Dell giving it back.

Other not so exciting news is I played Mega Man 4 and I was horrible at it, but retried many times over. It happened yesterday. The game looks extremely clear running on PS2. This is good with a two year old RF adapter. The disc loads the game into PS2's RAM and plays it.

As for my visual basic class, I've pretty much fallen behind for lack of interest. The instructor can only help me on Thursdays and Fridays. True, it's not a part of industrial networking, but finishing it would allow new possibilities in VB programming. VB programming crosses with C++ programming in some areas. I only own Visual Basic .net 2003. I've got into the programming. I don't like it, but I'm choosing to neglect my homework that's due in 19 days. I forget college isn't about setting around the computer and looking at the internet all day, it's about doing Visual Basic on a computer for long hours. I've got dedication at computer thing right. I don't play too many videogames instead collecting them (better than collecting movies). The problem is reading text in a book because I've horrible time reading books. I can read well, but the book doesn't keep my attention well. I dunno. I give my best attention to reading game reviews, but working on questions and referring back in the book to answer questions takes my attention a way. I've done the first 4 chapters in 8 days, and it took me 5 months to complete the 5th chapter. Something is wrong...the book suddenly got uninteresting very fast. It's odd I've aced my technical writing class!

I joined another gaming board called Cyberscore. I use the same avatar and nickname as Catharton. I already have one of the largest console collections and game lists on the site. I've just added another handheld now, the Gameboy Color, without owning a Gameboy Color.

New games to add to list:

- Legend of Zelda Oracle of Seasons (©2001: Capcom/Flagship)
- Legend of Zelda Oracle of Ages (©2001: Capcom/Flagship)

UNIX in the hitcounter (2005-04-23 19:03)

I'm not kidding when I say that 1 % of my views are Linux, but 7 % is UNIX.

My visitors (7 %) are using PC-BSD which is harder to use WINE. The 1990s era UNIX was supposed to be more secure than same period Linux. Old UNIX was harder to crash than old Linux. MAC OS 10 has its own spot at 3 %. BSD doesn't use crossover Pro. MAC OS 10 would use crossover pro. Crossover pro is a front end for WINE.

I still would go with openSUSE Linux, because of Crossover Linux Pro available.

My first Videogame burnout | Buying a new 5.25 megapixel camera for $140 | My life after the 4th semester of tech college (2005-04-29 04:22)

I am going through what the average gamer goes through I call a "videogame burn out." It's where there are so many choices of games and so little money to get them. I'm actually pulling my hair out finding the best game out now. I didn't think I would be in this position. I've always been someone who avoided "videogame burnout." The term comes from when an airplanes engine's stall...they'll "burn-out" and then you're in deep trouble to get the afterburners to "ignite" so the plane has power. Same way with videogames, I am so use to buying 2 or 3 videogames every week that off weeks seem like burn out. I'm not financially in trouble or anything, but it's true I only have $70 cash on hand with check book. I'm allowing my check balance pass $400 so I can afford an Xbox 360 on launch day and one launch title. I want an Xbox 360, and I can afford it if I make some tough decisions now which will cut down purchasing game software by 50 %. This year I've already spent a good chuck of dollars on Playstation Portable and PStwo. This purchase of a digital camera will affect what I buy the rest of 2005. I've bought the PStwo to ensure I have something to play on until Playstation 3 is available. This is my walking around money remember, and doesn't include money spent on housing or food. I'm thinking of making a birthday list with Xbox 360 at the top of the list. I've had my eye on the $140 Vivitar ViviCam 3935! The Vivicam 3935 comes with 4x digital zoom, packaged with USB cable and 32 MB SD media card. I have $90 already saved up for games, but buying a camera instead. I've got plenty of games to last a couple months. Needs $60 dollars more to afford the camera! The one I'm using now is 3.3 Mega pixel digital cam with 6x digital zoom, and I've gotten 2 ½ years ago. You can bet that my future JPEGs will look nicer. After I get the camera, I think I'll show everybody my 3 DDR sticks in my Dimension XPS (2x Samsung 512 MB DRR Dual Channel 400 MHz + 1 GB DDR 400 MHz over-clocking stick = 2GB DDR 400 MHz SDRAM .) I have all day to think it over. I also should mention that I downloaded another 120 MB of MP3s off Kazaa over dialup over two nights so I have 120 minutes of new music added to my HDD. Midway Games released M rated first person shooter Area 51 today for PS2 and Xbox. It reveals the truth about the Area 51 that has become a talking legend in recent years of government conspiracies. The FMV looks extremely realistic of the President and General of the Army, General of the Airforce, Admiral of the Navy, etc making a speech at a digitalized carbon copy of Pentagon in D.C. much like that Pentagon scene in the movie, "Independence Day" (it's a rip off of that movie in my opinion.) The FMV is about the fictional conspiracy that the US Government is hiding aliens (the blue Marian type) in the Nevada desert, and they want to take over, etc, etc, etc, and we will send Marines to Area 51 to fight to the death, etc, etc, etc. I'll be interested in this game for sure. I'm also going to put off buying Stella Deus for a couple weeks so I can afford the Vivitar ViviCam 3935.

All this week has been slow going. I've normally been doing nothing in front of the PC these past 6 days looking at various game reviews and writing them as well. I recently wrote a review on Metroid (NES) and it's remake, Metroid - Zero Mission. I feel that I have to update Cathartion Electronica more because I'm needed there. I like games so that's what there in the first place for...always keep that in mind. I was playing a little Final Fantasy Dawn of Souls. The action replay I put in the game keeps me from opening some chests so I can't go to the next area. I haven't played a RPG for over 2 months so I'm rusty on my Final Fantasy game play. To put simply I am dieing regularly...all part of the game. The Gamecube controller isn't that great for playing GBA games and has been less than helpful to me thus far.

Randy came over to my house on Sunday. We played Extreme G 1 and 3. He remembers Extreme G long time ago, so we played a couple races in that. He won a couple which means my skills aren't very good. I let him look at my cherished Playstation Portable. He said his sister was bickering about PSP the day before. I feel good now I have one. Then I played my flute, but not well. Afterwards, we went to Fleet Farm (a hardware warehouse) in Hudson, WI so he could pick up a $110 tool box for his used white Chevy pickup he paid $900 for. It was the cheapest model of tool box in stock. We would have gone to Game Stop if I wanted too, but instead we did something more local. He commented how it was the first stick-shift transmission he owned.

I may be in some deep shit in school because I didn't pass the 2nd visual basic class. Life is hard I know, but I didn't get through the chapter so now I need to do well in industrial networking classes...somehow perform some additional 50 % in school. Life is way too short though...can not let it bother me even though it's well beyond annoying. I've taken one programming course to test what it would be like to program for a living besides a lot of hard work The book was indeed confusing. My college may put me on a 3rd term of probation if I'm that lucky!

HD-DVD & Blu-Ray makers join forces! More game shots | Desktop shot | looking at DVD recorders at Tigerdirect | broadband draws near (2005-05-03 05:57)

This shelf was added because of my growing game collection first videogame shelf I had.

Old shelf I had since 2000

The other shelf I've bought in 2000. Serves it's purpose.

I added all my computer game boxes to the 2 shelves below that shelf by my TV with misc videogame software.

My desktop today. Stardocks 1.11 is really cool. I like it a lot.

HD-DVD and Blu-Ray Join Forces | The Meetings are classified

There's been quite a few stories recently (on reliable sites like the BBC and The Register) that Sony was saying it's open to negotiations with HD-DVD to merge the two systems. It's possible that the negotiations are going ahead.

It might be that Sony doesn't want to repeat the problems of Betamax, Minidisc and Memory Stick, where it ended up being an expensive minority format. If company founders merge Blu-ray and HD-DVD manufactures, everyone wins with this alliance, because there's no uncertainty of which format to purchase, and customers can go ahead and buy whatever the new format of the new alliance is called without worrying that it'll go obsolete two years later by one of competitor's better disc with more data capacity. This means that another higher tech ROM drive will be installed in Playstation 3s which prior to the merger was Blu-ray's debut product.

Both HD-DVD and Blu-ray both use a blue laser, that's how they can fit so much more onto a disc (the laser is smaller so the pits can be too). The industry had blue lasers burning data storage for 10 years, but it's taken until now for blue lasers to be cheap and easy enough to mass produce.

Blu-ray looked like it was likely to pull ahead and be Hollywood's media of choice.

More as it comes available.

Wisconsin (USA) life ramblings

I've taken a camera shot of all my videogames in their place. On Sunday, I asked my Mom to get Stella Deus Gates of Eternity for $50 at Game Stop. I own Stella Deus now. This morning I've been looking at DVD Recorders. This one burns DVDs in both NTSC and PAL MPEG2 codec although I don't know whether or not it'll burn Dual Layer DVDs. The disadvantage of DVD is that it's not enough minutes for most movies I watch off satellite. I'm pretty sure it's record, and it burns DVDs at default settings on-the-fly. I was looking at the Emerson Progressive Scan DVD/VCR Recorder and the Emerson EWR10DR DVD Recorder. The EWR10DR I can buy for 120 dollars while I'll be spending 70 dollars more on a VCR to DVD recording capabilities. With some simple cables linking the VCR to the DVD player I can do what the DVD/VCR recorders can for less money. I think I'll record Heavy Metal episodes on DVD off the History Channel. Heavy Metal has some cool 1 hour episodes about tanks, fighters, and military ships and weapons including various range missiles and torpedoes with mega TNT! I would love to burn them on SL-DVD, and will save me a ton of money and I can spend the left over money on videogames. I've added a DivX movie list on my angelfire webpage.

I was also looking at how you can get a 30 inch LCD TV with 750:1 contrast level for $900 plus shipping. That's less than my 25" TV's original cost 5 months ago! I don't need another LCD TV, but the future of TV sets is LCD TVs, and my next TV 5 years down the road could be a 35" LCD TV with better resolution once I find a job and can afford one in 2008. I require an Xbox 360 in November. I'm wondering if Project Gotham Racing 3 will be an Xbox 360 launch title and may be my first choice.

Confirmed X360 launch titles (updated)

- Project Gotham Racing 3
- Battlefield 2: Modern Warfare
- Call of Duty 2
- The Godfather
- Madden Football 2006
- FIFA 2006 (federal international football association)
- Dead or Alive 4
- Perfect Dark Zero (Rareware title)
- Need for Speed Underground 3
- New unannounced Namco franchise
- Kameo (another RAREware title)
- Halo 2.5

By the way, I'm getting broadband with free wireless NICs I'll get to install sometime this month! The most noticeable change is I can stream-save 192 kbps shoutcast broadcast channels and listen to the music in real time to give it all a way to my friends for free once I can find some. Point is be my friend cause I'll give you free music!

New games to add to collection

You know in People's Republic of China, companies sell HD-DVD and Bluray together in a case. They have this HD-DVD that runs a Chinese made encoder. Audio Video Standard (AVS)

DVD Forum said HD-DVD, but settled on DVD instead. At the time nobody knew it.

Talked to Bob who I haven't met in 5 months | Bought and played Guild Wars Online PC game (2005-05-07 13:52)

Bob ignored me for the pass six months, but I decided I had the guts to call him back on his cell phone yesterday. He works in a town 10 minutes a way from where I live so I drove to the gas station in the evening after the electricity suddenly went out, and that's the first time this year too. My dad was sleeping so I had to wake him, because the garage door was locked or was it? Anyhow, he used his muscles to get the garage door open for me so I could see my former best friend Bob. I hanged out in the Freedom gas station for 3 hours and it there were few people around at that time of night. Talked about videogames with him and told him about my big collection. Bob says he lives in a house with his friend Jim who is a nerd. Jim lives with his girlfriend and their 2 yr old daughter (they aren't married yet.) He's suppose to be very smart at what he does best...figuring out many software problems by himself. Bob told me how I shall buy Everquest 2 and have him pay the subscription fee so we can play together. I wasn't sure about it. To get off the Everquest 2 topic I've had instead suggested Guild Wars to him where the men are buffed up and the women are run-a-way babes with nice curves and wear bikini mails (the female elementists anyhow.) I'd showed him Lumines for PSP. He didn't care for it partly because PSP wasn't important. As I was standing around talking to him there were young adults coming in picking up a 12 pack of Budweiser so I stand around not look interested. You know it's one of those young men who still wear their high school jeans and cap backwards, but who cares...it's their style....I'm still a stranger from the country who likes computers, but the new kind who likes technology! I'm really behind in my urban lifestyle wisdom. There is no time like the present. I've stayed here talking to him to about 11pm before I headed back home. Bob listened to The Perfect Circle (loves that band.) Perfect Circle is on the edge of vocal rock and heavy metal. They're okay in my opinion, but not as groovy. Perhaps that's because I'm listening to dance music it made me uneasy at the beginning, until I've heard it wasn't metal so I was fine, because everyone listens to heavy metal in Wisconsin. There is your Country crowd (small portion), your hip hop crowd (largest portion), and your heavy metal crowd (2nd largest portion). I'm like half way between the trance crowd and the heavy metal crowd. More unique than many people. Bob said he phone me tomorrow so meanwhile I'll play Guild Wars which is fine too, because it's simply stunning to look at.

My digital camera came in the mail two days ago, but my mom has the flash media card I require to take pictures and I am unable to pay her. The leather case which came with the box is made out of cow hide instead of deer hide. O-well. It won't help me take pictures.

Today, I've bought Guild Wars at the local department store....that's where the catch 22 comes in. On Wednesday, I've had drove to both Target and Wal-mart to find it's sold out....came back again today to get it again.

I've been reading Game Spy's Guild Wars review and installed it before an hour to downloading 2 patches, but the actual game seems exceptionally fast over dial up. Believe me, I know this, because I've experienced many games over a modem, and this has one of the best 3D action of nearly all of them (retail version isn't buggy at all.) I've set the game at 1600x1200 resolution with 4x anti-analyzing which is processed with 2 GB of RAM and 3.2 GHz CPU. Look for yourself, the screenshot is indeed above average. This game looks better than Xbox 360 game shots in my opinion! Graphics are 9.5 out of 10 for sure, but pretty good looking on my PC. Guild Wars is a free online RPG.

I had called Target today, and the store hasn't even heard of Forza Motorsport! I spoke to a teenager clerk, but rather I was in control so I hung up while he was searching for the game. I mean Forza Motorsport has been out since May 3rd. That game is Xbox's equivalent to Gran Turismo 4 and currently Xbox's best racing game. Graphics wise it's every bit as good as Project Gotham 2. Forza Motorsport is going to be my next purchase, after I can find more money. I'm broke again. I want to start off fighting worms until I can build her up to level 1 and beyond. That takes time which I have plenty of. So the guy asked me to stay on the line.

I might move out of my parent's place with in the next 6 months. We're getting into tiny conflicts lately so I stay in my room and look at the Internet all day long. I don't hate my parents, but rather don't like them sometimes, and we do have our differences. I checked out for a job at Home Depot and I plan to call more places tomorrow.

[May 08, 2005] Today, I called Bob who said he's working all day, so I've been playing Guild Wars from 7:10AM to 12:30PM over dial up and timed out 2 times. I've made two friends had got up to level 3 and died only 2 times. So far we thought we could level up so we're able to quests the game has. We've figured out the best way to spend our time is to level up constantly via killing everything in site as long as it doesn't kill us first and thus we had fought the creatures we knew we would win against. My xfire account shall of said that I've logged on three hours in Guild Wars. That's my proof I've been playing this game for several hours. Its seems like some of the personal commands in the chat window are /help, /dance, /wave, /sit, /jump, /flute, /drums, / guitar, /laugh, /head pounding, /clap, /shout, /yes, /no and probably several more.

Pic of 2048 MB RAM | DOS doesn't recognize 2048 MB of RAM | Bought Slipheed Lost Planet today (2005-05-12 00:54)

Well, low virtual memory is a thing of the past. That's also the case if you have 1024 MB of RAM. When there is 786 MB of RAM installed you'll never get low virtual memory problems. 2 GB decreases lag by a lot when switching between Winamp and Guild Wars in window mode. If anyone tries this with 786 MB of RAM or less your computer will most likely freeze up.

Concerning 512 MB of RAM is good for 2D applications don't expect any less in 2005, because everything comes with 512 MB now-a-days until Xbox 360 is launched which will have a generous 512 MB of RAM.

Proof here:

MS-DOS has problems only recognizing 1024 MB.

Meanwhile, my female warrior is level 5 now, completed 6 quests, and now looking for another class. Guild War players are suppose to be dual class. I'm deciding whether I want to be a paladin or a melee-Elementist (elementist and warrior). I'd added another friend to a messenger service. A paladin is another name for a holy warrior which was a playable character in Diablo 2.

As for today in 12:20am in the morning I drove to Wal-Mart to find a game called Forza Motorsport, an May 2005 best seller, and a stellar as well as most awesome Xbox racing game on the market! This is the Lamborghini Diablo of racing games on Xbox! Everyone else wants it too because gamers aren't dumb so when it comes to games like this...we're all in the same wagon.... Unfortunately, that game was sold out within the first day it was at Wal-Mart. Instead I had bought the Treasure shooter, Silpheed: The Lost Planet. Silpheed was published on Sega CD in 1992 and the PS2 version is the remake. Silpheed - The Lost Planet has been extremely rare in Wisconsin until I just magically saw the game retailing for $20 and immediately purchased it. Silpheed is my 77th PS2 game! It was a pretty 2D shooter when it came out, but it's score had been decreased because Silpheed is 3rd hardest PS2 game. Every decision has to be synced and drilled into my brain much like Gradius V and Ikaruga (also Treasure made 2D shooters) were, and hadn't made it far in either of them.

Anyways, I haven't met one of my real-life friends in 2 weeks. Damn, this is disappointing! I was bored so I went out to Wal-mart to buy Forza Motorsport. Problem is I didn't expect to be ignored that way, but I wasn't exactly myself that day. People like me know a lot about games so I know the nerdy stuff normal people don't. While I'm not a good FAQ writer I've three years experience writing detailed game reviews.

Speculating Xbox 720 Specs | Able to run Sega Genesis Emulation on my Playstation 2 (2005-05-15 19:04)

Well everyone, I had missed the Xbox 360 special. I've heard it had a lot of music in it. In my opinion, the show was suppose to be about the Xbox 360's games and previews, but it was mostly concert. Anyhow, <http://xbox360.ign.com> has news on it.

Today has been interesting. Randy has gone deer bow hunting for the weekend up North without his dad because his dad answered the phone when I asked for him. Randy really likes to deer hunt you know, and has been buck hunting with his family for 10 years.

Genesis Emulation on standard Playstation 2

Anyhow, two days ago, I've bought an Action Replay Max Evo Edition which allows ELF files to run on my Playstation 2 or PSTwo. An ELF file is always an emulator. The two emulators able to run on my PS2 were SNES Station and PGEN. A.R.M.E.E runs Genesis ROMs out of the box. Genesis games on PC or console with SMD file extension. Max Media Center formats CDs that'll work in A.R.M.E.E. Media Player. PGEN's instant saving function makes up for the Game Genie. Emulation is perfect in my opinion. PGEN is based off the best Genesis emulator for PC, GENS. The Emulator loads itself and the ROM into RAM so the game won't freeze. In fact, I could eject the CD and the game will continue running. The storage limit is 600 MB. For $40 this is good deal, because I've 80 Sega Genesis games I can play on my PS2

I figured out maybe if when I find my PS2 memory card, I could format it and save 1 ROM onto it via Action Replay's memory card management software. Problem is always deleting game saves off the memory card, and my game saves are worth more than any old game. With A.R.M.E.E., I had bought my code lists patches in a sense. Now I can download code lists straight off thumb drive given too me. I can leave the 3 MB worth of codes on the thumb drive and it would have all the codes of any game I own in my collection so I can cheat in the RPGs like I've done for 3 years without the slow process of inputting numbers.

[May 16, 2005] I've deleted my ROM list in this entry because no body cared for it when the list existed. Anyhow, I am so happy I got to play Phantasy Star IV – End of the Millennium on my LCD TV. The game looks better than Phantasy Star II and III. Phantasy Star IV starts again on a planet where the mother brain is starting to produce monsters again and the crews have to save the planet again. The cut scenes are interesting. I played that for 4 hours the other day. I have a problem of not playing my old games especially my Genesis games. It could be because they're old, but I bought these games to own some history before the 32-bit generation. I remember the good times I was playing Super Mario Bros. on a Nintendo only last month. My friend says that everybody into videogames shall at least played Super Mario Bros on NES once because it's a classic. I said, "Whatever, Randy."

Xbox 720 Speculation For Fun

I was also going to speculate Xbox 720's future specs estimate by the way technology is advancing with Xbox 360. It was something to post in this slow transition time when there is nothing new to post on the forums. Comment if you wish.

- Since Xbox had a Pentium 3 at 733 MHz vs. the IBM Xbox 360 CPU at 3.2 GHz I shall suggest that Xbox 720 has 4 times the MHz as Xbox 360s CPU. So Xbox 720 will have a six or nine core 64-bit CPU clocking at 12.6 GHz made by IBM in 2010 remember.
- Xbox had only 64 MB of shared RAM because the money was spent on the XGPU, a modified Nvidia Geforce 3 with 128 MB GDDR clocking at 200 MHz, I suggest that the RAM of the Xbox 720 will be 2048 MB of RAM or as much RAM as my PC has now in 2005.
- The Xbox 360 has a 256-bit GDDR2 ATI GPU clocking at 500 MHz so I think I'll double it saying the Xbox 720 GPU will be approximately 512-MB GDDR3 DRR at a whopping 1 GHz in 2010.
- I think the Xbox 720 will 512 MB as standard storage in flash media cards.
- The Xbox 720 disc ROM drive will have the currently classified ROM which Blu-ray and HD-DVD manufactures are putting together holding as much storage as Blu-ray Discs or 25 GB.
- The controllers will similar to the Xbox 360 controller and probably will be wireless as well. For Xbox games the two triggers above the L and R triggers replaces the Xbox 1 controller's white and black buttons.
- The Xbox 720 will be smaller than Xbox 360.
- The Xbox 720 will have 802.11G unlike Xbox 360's 802.11B connection

Games to add to list:

None today. New ROMs, but I have respect too. I only count the physical cartridge form of software I own.

Bye, that's all for now.

The new Nintendo Revolution Specs

Launch Date: Summer 2006

Megagames got an insider of the latest Nintendo Revolution prototype and it's 700 MHz slower than Xbox 360. MoSys, the Gamecube memory manufacture is adding memory to Revolution.

Another slot in drive. Gosh. We're getting high tech now. Serious business.

The real next generation Nintendo console? Internet says it is.

In its final form, Revolution will be about the thickness of three standard DVD cases and only slightly longer. The versatile Revolution will play either horizontally or vertically, allowing the user total flexibility in setting up a gaming session wherever they have a television.

The controller isn't revealed because that's the most revolutionary part of the Revolution. Nintendo wishes not to show the controller at E3 2005.

Specs of IBM Hollywood, the Revolution CPU.

Four 2.5Ghz IBM G5 Custom cores with 128KB of level 1 cache and a 512KB shared level 2 cache.

ATI "Broadway"

GPU will offer a dual core RN520 chipset with a 16 MB on-board eDRAM frame buffer.

Other Known Specs

- 802.11B WiFi connectivity with Dual Screen and/or another Revolution with 10 meters away
- Wireless controllers
- backwards compatible with Gamecube software meaning it has a Gecko 485 MHz co-Processor
- Gyroscope controllers with handle rubbing and grip abilities.

My game collection is better than his | I didn't go down to Florida this time (2005-05-19 11:35)

Today, I've been looking at game collections and looking at how users with older games tend to be less valuable than owners with newer games even though sometimes they have more old games.

For instance, Akdirztt has 420 games all together even though his collection is worth $765.16 less than mine with 3 games more. In the next generation everything will decrease in cost anyways, but my collection will still be worth more unless he suddenly buys a whole bunch of next generation games new at $50 - $70 each.

My collection (wisconsinite54)

Akdirztt's collection

Who can have this many games?

Eternalldarkness surely has a lot of money to burn as you can see. Look at how many games be bought for Xbox, PS2, and PC. That's way too much. It's like $8,000 more than mine.

So the question is would I rather have more games or more valuable collection. Videogames loose their worth over the years, but if you own older games, your collection would be less anyways. Akdirztt's collection serving as a fine example of what I'm talking about here.

I am going to buy a Playstation 3 even if IGN said it's $450. That's a lot of money. Although I could ask money for my birthday which would cover more than half the cost of it so I would have at least one next generation console. My favorite RPGs are on Playstation 2 so staying with the Playstation brand is smart. The controller may look strange, but I can deal with it, cause this new PS3 controller probably plays better than it looks. That'll be in spring. It looks like that seriously good looking Killzone 2 it's looking like a PS3 launch title. Madden Football 2006 is the best looking sports game by the way for any next gen console.

So lately, I had nothing to do so I was playing Forza Motorsport placing 2nd and 3rd at the end because somehow when I try to be aggressive and cheap stunts to get ahead, the competition somehow nudges my car enough that it'll spins out of control. The other drivers do that so I don't have an easy victory. One time I was in the lead for a two lap race and on the second lap I had braked too hard and two or three A.I. drivers passed me up so I immediately tried to make sharper turns with my car, but failed and drove into the grass right before the finish line! I got mad at the controller and didn't want to play any longer and as a result of feeling depressed over it all I've had chatted on the gaming forums again.

The game is well designed as far as the graphics go and the control is good, but the cars come with no hand brake so I'm relying on normal breaking pads to slow down which is bad. All racing games except this one have hand brakes and in every game the hand brake button works better than normal brake. The point of a race is never shifting into reverse by driving off the road, and if that happens, the race is already lost. That doesn't keep me from playing the game any less. The artificial intelligence only makes driving more frustrating, because I'm no good at it yet much like many other games I own. When I wake up, I'll probably go down to my other room and turn on the xbox to play it. I believe after I write this I will go to bed and then play more Forza Motorsport than review the game on two sites. Yes, I do review games for free and post it on two forums.

Morning, I had an experience on a board where this one person I knew on another board said Americans are dumb. This all started when Sega Genesis is a stupid name. My response to that was that's just how things are. So as a result this person I knew on another board called me dumb. Then my response was "we have bigger guns than you British" His response to that was, "Yes, Americans have very, very big guns, but you can't aim for the enemy!" I continued by saying that our arsenal is all computerized and is targeted with the help of a GPS targeting systems and/or laser targeting systems so there isn't a chance we could miss the target. I believe he was thinking about the terrorists and saying that there has been friendly fire in some American battle zone...possibly Iraq. The British are not apart of it so I can understand why some of them are a bit confused.

For my Angelfire website, I want something simple and can navigate well, and I've achieved both with my current template using minimal html code, but it looks way too simple and unsophisticated. I would feel better if I complicate things a tad, and I'm unsure how I'll go about it. I've been known to borrow other site's html code, but I pretty much have everything on it that a personal webpage shall be. I belong to two forums and one Playstation Club.

My next game purchase when this new anime RPG comes out on Wednesday. The local videogame store I buy games from said they'd never have Stella Deus in stock, but now they do so they don't say what they mean very well. Not that the people working there are lying, but Toyriffic eventually has games in stock only sold in Game Stop and "don't know" a week later. By the way, I hadn't had time to play Stella Deus - Gates of Eternity yet. I hear this new RPG is better than Stella Deus. My mom owes me $30 for cropping photos and printing out photo quality graphics on phone paper in black and white.

I haven't met either of my friends for two weeks. Either they're loosing interest in me or they don't have time to visit me. I'm out of school and no one at WITC invited me to a PC LAN party like that one time during Easter Break last year when some people in the network technician class were going to get together and I drove around Hammond in search of the his home address since the note on the college room door said meet somewhere in Hammond, but the address on the paper didn't exist. Bob's working at a gas station and I can go meet him if I choose, but won't because I prefer hanging around in my room alone with the low bandwidth Internet which gets me to a gateway to infinite information not to mention free music. The broadband guys are behind schedule, and aren't the only family in the middle of no where around here who wants broadband so we're on the list somewhere.

This week, I'm driving to KOULS to buy athletic socks because most of the socks I own have holes in them as a result of walking around the basement. That'll be exciting. I might look at some new baggy cargo pants too! I haven't worn jeans for years so I don't own 1 pair of jeans! My father flown to Maples, Florida near the Atlantic Coast to attend a national financial business conference and golf so he's picking up one or two of those multi-colored dyed T-shirts for his son. Only tropical places have these. It seems like his company invited him to a golf tournament of some sort. It's what my old man does and he calls golf a sport. He bought a slightly used driver worth $300 and he says it drastically improves his game. By drivers I mean golf clubs. He mentioned it comes down too bad golfers with a high quality driver can be better in a game with good golfers with a cheap driver. You'd think the PGA golfers have the elite versions tailor made to their height. I haven't been in Florida since 1999.

In Wisconsin, you have to be tough to adapt to the drastic weather changes. Most people don't realize it, but Wisconsin has all four seasons with temperatures ranging from -10 to 80 degrees with everything from snow storms to rain storms. It can be as high as 70 degrees in the day time to about 50 degrees at night in one day. In the summer Wisconsinites deer hunt with rifles or bows, go fishing, drive to Canada, ride motorbikes on dirt trails, or join baseball leagues. Winter is a whole different can of beans, Americans snowboard or snowmobile. You got to love the many recreational stuff going on around here in Wisconsin. Soccer usually isn't one of them, sorry.

Night everyone.

New haircut | Played Stella Deus and first impressions | Square-Enix's Dragon Quest 8 selling out to Dragon Ball? (2005-05-23 18:56)

Over the weekend, I watched the Fox Soccer Channel which was showing Major League Soccer, Argentina League, and French League soccer for two days. The Washington DC United were playing the Chicago Wizards and D.C. United won 1 – 0. It was also a home game for D.C. United. The Argentina soccer field was littered with paper and trash. I didn't see the final soccer. River Plate won 1 – 0. The Fox Soccer Channel is the only channel in the US that broadcasts soccer games. There is also ESPN Sports Network which broadcasts European soccer games in the US, but do we care enough to make it pay even if they're better at it than we are? No clue. No fair using the FIFA since that involves the whole world.

By the way, I recommend downloading "Energy 52 – Calf Del Mar '98" off Kazaa! It's a must listen too. It's a pretty good song.

Today, I got a new haircut when I drove to River Falls and talked to this female adult (her name was Shelly) so I went okay, nice to meet you out of politeness. I can do whatever I want without the outside world knowing about it for one, and play games all day if I choose to be another. Thirdly, I can play what music I want to play without people being alienated by it. Dad came back from Florida and brought two $50 dress shirts back with him so being polite I took one of them and wore it outdoors. My parents thought I looked good which is why I got them in the first place. I wanted the dyed shirts. When the barber finished my haircut, I went straight home, because when I walk in ShopKo where I buy some videogames, but Game Stop is a possibility on the 27th so I'll buy this new RPG while trying to avoid spots of construction which comes with highly dense population like Woodbury. Atelier Iris: Eternal Mana comes out tomorrow.

I turned on my PS2 and played Stella Deus Gates of Eternity last night. Stella Deus is a grid based strategy RPG similar to Final Fantasy Tactics. Imagine Final Fantasy Tactics in high resolution. "Stella" means a star formed and "Deus" means a machine of God. I was playing some of this game as well as Forza Motorsport. I watched the Full Motion Video introduction in Stella Deus which is anime with cell shading for effect. This game is cell shaded which is a technique which makes the game look cartoonier. I find out that the game has something to do with a powerful wizard, Viser, and together the main characters will save the their world from fate cause it said so in the introduction. The main character is Spero, a young dude who lost his sword to Echidna, an evil character in this game and he wants it back, and therefore, the real game begins so I've won the first battle very easily than gone further into the game and met even more characters, but lost my progress due to the lack of memory card. I want to cheat using the Action Replay, but that requires a memory card. Graphics are average, but the art direction is unique which is why there's a small market for these games. The game has voice acting for every subtitle in the game, but one can't deny it's a goofy script. It's on DVD so it may have a lot of 30 second to minute long FMV which is good, because I like watching videogame movies.

I noticed that Dragon Quest VIII was on the top ten list on IGN. The Japanese version out in Japan received a high 9.2 out of 10 which means that the English version will be tweaked so it's better. It got a 9.2 on Gamasutra.com DQVIII is selling out to Dragon Ball here! LOL! It might have to do with the art direction of Chrono Trigger. The two look similar. The main character in DQVIII looks a lot like Chrono also so gamers take note. Level 5 is developing it for Enix now merged with Squaresoft. I own two other Level 5 RPGs, Dark Cloud 1, 2. This popular Enix franchise is coming out on my 21st birthday believe it or not! My current path in aggression leads to 85 Playstation 2 games by November [5 games per month x 5 months = 25 games (divided by 3)]. The myth that Square-Enix only develops for Sony platforms is untrue.

This is goodnight.

My first Wikipedia videogame article | Going to Game Stop later (2005-05-25 12:51)

I started smoking...it's a joke. I can stick the cigarette in my mouth, but wouldn't dare light it. Just trying to look cool like smokers out there so smoke every day.

The problem with Wikipedia is there is always someone who wants to revert back to the previous revision after I spent all that time trying to make a neat article. All the revisions are saved on the database so all I had to do was copy and paste the article again, but I don't want too!

Beginning of my Article

To my surprise, I just couldn't use the term "512-bit generation" because 512-MegaBytes is 4,294,967,296 bits so to avoid the confusion I had to adapt to Microsoft's "HD Generation" term. Before the 32-bit generation (Playstation, Nintendo 64, Saturn), the era was determined on the CPU's word size. During the 16-bit age such CPUs would be considered way ahead of their time and possibly be referred to as super computers like the Playstation 3 now.

The Seventh Generation Era includes Sony Playstation 3, Nintendo Revolution and Microsoft Xbox 360. The first videogame console, MS Xbox 360, is being launched this November! Both Playstation 3 and Xbox 360 have 512 MB of RAM. No news on Nintendo Revolution's controller. All consoles are PowerPC based and carry 64-bit CPUs made by IBM. Microsoft and Nintendo contract with ATI for graphics, while Sony contracts with Nvidia for Playstation 3.

It is believed that the most popular videogame console from the sixth generation (PS2) will carry on to be the most popular successor (PS3) of the seventh generation. All seventh generation consoles are backwards compatible with predecessors in the sixth generation. The PS2 was completely sold out in Japan in preorders, and the same can be said about the Playstation 3. Microsoft has the most money to loose, so they're retailing Xbox 360 to about $250 to $300 as opposed to the Playstation 3 retailing for as much as $450. It is believed the Nintendo Revolution (unconfirmed name) will be the cheapest of all the consoles. Nintendo has confirmed that not only will the 'Revolution' be backwards combatable, but it will also be able to run the entire back catalogue of Nintendo games, this includes NES, SNES and N64 games which can be downloaded using the online service.

The difference between the sixth generation and the seventh is the transformation to higher high-resolution graphics (support for 1080i, 1080p), the complete disappearance of analyzing (jaggies some gamers call it) and nothing else. Online play set a standard last generation. Sound won't get much better this time around, and sometimes unnoticeable! Wireless controllers were available last generation, but not as an out-of-the-box peripheral like the 7th generation era. Wired controllers now use USB 2.0 ports to plug into like their PC gamepad cousins. Wireless controllers in the seventh generation use Bluetooth technology.

Some odds and ends are the addition of the removable hard drive and the introduction of the USB thumb drive. Previously, the USB thumb stick was packaged with the Action Replay Max Evo Edition for PS2. In the 7th era generation it will replace the memory card. The Playstation 3 will have a removable hard drive, internal memory stick duo drive, and USB thumb drive option also for saving games. Xbox 360 will have the sixth generation era idea of exclusive memory cards, and a removable HDD too. The Xbox 360 is unique because the Xbox 360 HD comes with internal hard drive like Xbox.

The seventh generation era is believed by some to be the darker era in the history of video games more so than the sixth generation era. It also features topics of debate including sex, crime, and violence criticisms and criticisms of other "objectionable" content (see video game controversy), religion, politics, feminism, economics, 9/11, various debates between "old school" and "new school" gaming, debates about voice acting, and the terms "Golden Age" and "Silver Age." Also like the sixth generation it's filled with nostalgia, such as when NES and SNES ROM images became easier to find (see emulation). Many gamers think that SNES games are still most amusing, calling the 16-bit era the "golden age of video gaming." It is also a time when several video games or video game series that were once confined to Japan came to North America, notably Fire Emblem and Nintendo Wars. The enhanced remake idea, which was devised by the Mario franchise (with Super Mario All-Stars) during the 16-bit era and the "anthology collections", were popularized during this era. Most user bannings in computer game related Internet forum have occurred in the sixth generation era, but not stopping in the seventh generation era.

Microsoft has dubbed this era in use of videogame marketing, at least for their next-generation video game console, as the high-definition era. Both consoles by Sony and Microsoft will support HD output in 720p and 1080i optimized for 16:9 aspect ratio.

7:50PM Tonight. Dad drives me to Game Stop so I can pick up Atelier Iris Eternal Mana, a Japanese SRPG, but I find out the store doesn't have it. The Internet said it had the right date, but unfortunately, the store didn't get it. IGN.com said it came out yesterday. So I had a quick look around saw two other games Shining Tears and Shin Megami Tensei Digital Devil Saga. Shin Megami Tensei Digital Devil Saga isn't suppose to be as good as Shin Megami Tensei: Nocturne which wasn't in stock there. Atelier Iris will be another day's purchase...maybe even next week.

New games to add to collection:

Ridge Racer for Playstation Portable (3rd PSP game!) I spent over $350 on Playstation Portable already!

Started playing it and I feels like Ridge Racers. The FMV was great, but there was an Asian female which I find a little attractive. But I got into the game and the game has rock in it which I am unsure about so I drive in the game and I find the gameplay above average for a handheld. I read the IGN and Gamespy reviews too. I agree with the editors so I bought the game. Gamerankings said it was the top 3 PSP games to own & I own the top three so there you go.

Found some script today to protect my blog from ppl who steal text! (2005-05-29 15:52)

Today, I'm listening to country music such music when I was a young boy up till 8th grade so I was listening to Confederate Railroad and Garth Brook's Scarecrow & his Greatest Hits album. I like track 04 in Garth Brook's Scarecrow the best. Good songs in The Greatest Hits Album are The Dance (track 5) and everyone else does too, Thunder Rolls (track 3), and Rodeo (track 1). Other songs include some from Brooks and Dunn and Big and Rich. And yes, one song from Randy Travis.

Friday, I drove to Hudson in a thunder storm, and bought Ridge Racer. In the morning, I won the first cup. The first 3 tracks were very easy, but during the 4th digital track the leader was much more aggressive than the 22 cars excluding me. The game really did look great on the LCD Ridge Racer doesn't have the textures the PS2 has, but Ridge Racer V (also own) hadn't either when it was popular. RRV has more jaggies (analyzing) than most PS2 games which is bad. Both Ridge Racers were launch titles in 2000 and 2005. Same deal with PSP, but game critics gave it a high score of 8.8 or above.

Addicted2Yew gave me the idea of preventing people from highlighting text and I know exactly how to do it, found script, but have this problem whether or not the admin will accept my new borrowed source code. Afterwards, I was playing my Playstation Portable and Dual Screen. My GBA is more neglected than my Dual Screen which is more neglected than my PSP. I gave Super Mario 64 DS another try yesterday and again this morning. Super Mario 64 was my favorite game up 'til early '98 when I owned few games where I'm currently at 16 stars with Yoshi (well known Nintendo character). Dual Screen is a good stress reliever as long as I get my way!

I've yet to buy a memory card for my PS2, and therefore, undecided if I'll buy another one this week. Memory cards are essential when you play for long periods. I'm thinking Randy's girlfriend stolen my action replay and regular memory card, but I have no proof.

Anyhow I want to show my current Winamp skin. Pretty damn cool isn't it! I found it while looking for another skin. I had the classic Winamp 2x skin running for over a month, and it's time for a new one. I think its sweet looking. Today, I've mowed the front and back lawn and did a decent job where not all the grass was cut the 2nd time through. During mowing I had hit a rock, cussed, and then threw the rock far into the woods. The steel blade of the lawn mower split the good sized rock in half which is why I cussed in the first place. I finally got done so I went back on my PC to do what I do best....talk on the forums, because neither Bob nor Randy were available.

Meanwhile, I've been getting strange amount of page views Saturday and Sunday! 99 views per day is a lot too. I remember when I had 180 views per day which only means I was more popular back then. Visitors come from the game forums which I linked the blog too. <http://ian1984.Modblog.com> is in my profile at <http://isgb.Blogspot.com>. Find out how your company rates by using a little known rating system!

Is your company a Scam, Dud, Scheme, Fraud Or Good Opportunity?.

95 % of the money-making opportunities on the internet have been worked to death or are not suitable to be marketed through the internet. How does your company and/or opportunity rate... I'll leave it to you to decide if your service, product and/or money making opportunity falls in this category.

Hurry you may NOT be happy with what you will find!

Used a hex editor on SNES Station and failed | Found 81st PS2 game | Went to Bob's house (2005-06-02 17:45)

I've tried doing the memory card way and I can run Super Mario RPG on the PS2. However, I want to boot the roms off CDR! Max Media Center will crash if I add SMC files to it. I tried renaming the ROMS to SMD, but SNES Station didn't recognize that extension. I believe there is an *.int system file which approves SMD instead of SMC, and I want it so I can modify it so I can burn the CD with SNES Station on it! If I rename the SNES Station ELF file to autoexec.elf the Playstation 2 will boot SNES Station instead of PGEN.

I had failed using a hex editor on SNES Station. Max Media Center doesn't support child folders or SMC files required to play Super Nintendo videogames. I don't know how I can add ROMs to memory cards & would doubt someone will just tell me.

SNES Station didn't show a picture, but I used the XVI hex editor to change SMC to SMD in the encrypted script than adding a ROM Folder using text to binary translation, but had no clue where to add the "string". My ELF was corrupted. These are steps I took that didn't work. However, I believe I had the right idea and in the same ballpark.

Step 1: I've extracted SNES Station from it's Zip File.

Step 2: Opened the Elf file in the hex editor.

Step 3: Found Search, Find in the menu bar.

Step 4: Typed in SMC in the search tool so I could modify C with D.

Step 5: deleted the word "rom" in the ELF executable hopefully so SNES station won't look for the ROM folder and will find files in the root directory.

Step 6: Used the command prompt to change all SMC files to SMD

Step 7: added the SMD files plus the ELF file into Max Media Creator

Step 8: Press Create button in the program to burn the CD.

Where did I go wrong? The elf file didn't work on the thumb drive either. I want to contact the programmer responsible for SNES Station and ask him if he could modify SNES station to read ROMs using A.R.M.E.E.

Tuesday, I visited Bob at his house. He and I were good friends up till April 2004. The only one person I know who likes heavy metal. He gave me his address so I printed out a map off the Internet, passed his house & drove to Star Prairie (12 mile detour.) I called him on my cell phone and he told me his house is by Pete's Pizza exactly where he was. After I've found his house we've chatted about what to do. We've took a bit of a "WisconTrip to the bank." I've said much about my newest videogames including Forza Motorsport. Bob's roommate Jim lives upstairs. I gave him trance collection and his response is boring. His retina was sort of dilated meaning he basically hates it a lot! I've noticed while over there his PS2 is very dusty, but he won't sell his games to anyone.

Bob has cats including one Siamese kitten he calls Baby, and I forgot what he calls the other kitten. Afterwards, he shown me Everquest 2 and I've suggested Guild Wars plays a lot like it. In my opinion, Guild Wars is amongst the best in PC Massive Multiplayer Online Role Playing Games. His new PC is a lot more powerful than his old one before his motherboard got fried during a thunderstorm last year. Bob owns an Athlon XP 2800, 1024MB of RAM, and a 128-MB DDR ATI Radeon 9250SE or something similar. Jim builds all his friends' computers for free! Everquest II plays well on his computer, and plays a barbarian Half-Ogre with a magic enchanted long sword wearing a chain mail & steal helmet He doesn't have money to afford the newest hardware. Bob might purchase Guild Wars so I can play with him. We went Burger King and I ordered a Double Whopper Value Meal which Bob paid for and reimbursed him when we ate at his house.

Yesterday, I drove to Target and spent $35 on a 32 MB PS2 memory card. The two memory cards before today are lost forever. I've found the missing Gran Turismo 4 DVD in the Saving Private Ryan case.

Today, I was playing Gran Turismo 4. I've cheated by activating the turbo boost cheat forcing the 2002 Mini Cooper S to loose control. In the end, there's a special replay to let me know the game knows I cheated! Gran Turismo 4 is a must own videogame for PS2 with the best mix of graphics or game play. Except the other racing games are very good especially Gran Turismo 3 - A Spec. It's possible to trade Gran Turismo 4 for Sly 2 - Band of Thieves. Otherwise, I could always sell it to my friend Randy for $40.

I've found out Grandia 3 (videogame) isn't coming to North America. This game looks more like Grandia 2 than Grandia Xtreme which were 3D with a renaissance period storyline. Square-Enix may or may not change their mind about Grandia 3 coming out in USA. Game Arts sets high standards in development in all their games. Grandia 2 was Dreamcast's most popular RPG in the US. The foreign language is the only issue I have with buying imports.

hi, quite a collection you got going for you. i too have a vast collection, i am just too lazy to write all of them down. #1:i was wondering did you figure out how to play snes roms on the action replay for ps2? #2:i am still working on trying to get the sega games to work. the max media software did not accept my cdrw, so i am trying to use nero to burn them , i have not yet got it yet. something about burning a .cue file. so if you could go though the process with me it would be of great help. and #3: i have herd that somehow you can play snes roms on sega dreamcast, by burning a iso image. do you know this trick and is it as simple as it sounds? , thank you for your time, write me back or email me: dracoszuldare@aol.com

Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site (2005-09-03 23:15:00)

The Max Media Center does a special partition to the CD that Nero can't do. The MMC should be able to see hte burner too. Otherwise install MMC on some other PC /w the roms.

PSP emus don't work | Met Bob again and bought games (2005-06-07 21:23)

I've found out that there are several console emulators out for Japan's Playstation Portable including ones that emulate NES, SNES, NeoGeo, Masters System, Genesis, and such. Problem is not one is compatible with the US version of PSP. You can tell in System Settings by looking at the BIOS version. Japan's BIOS is v1.0 while North America's BIOS is v1.5 and European version doesn't exist as of yet. The emulator is extracted into the PSP/GAME folder on the memory stick duo.

Emulators for PSP

1. Nester J (NES) for BIOS v1.0
2. RIN (Gameboy Color) for BIOS v1.0
3. N.G.P. (Neo Geo Color) for BIOS v1.0
4. Master System Emu (Sega Masters) for BIOS v1.0
5. SNES9x (Super Nintendo) for BIOS v1.0

Meanwhile, I was drooling over new screenshots of Quake 4 and Gears of War on Xbox 360 & possibly my next console. The team (Raven Software) responsible for Quake 4 is from Madison, Wisconsin! Gears of War may be the top seller for Xbox 360 in November, because it looks great. Quake 4 is another launch title. According to ID Software's interview with IGN, Quake 4 will be noticeably scarier and harder than Doom 3. In Doom 3, I am tripping all the booby traps hidden in darkness.

Today, I was hanging out with my former best friend Bob. We're planned ahead via MSN Messenger where to meet and what to do. When he drove to my house, I've shown him my warrior monk in Guild Wars than we headed to his friend's house who wasn't there so Bob and I proceeded to Game Stop in Woodbury, Minnesota. After 20 minutes of browsing their selection I've picked Unreal Championship 2, because I like first person shooters as an alternative to RPGs. Bob likes The Perfect Circle so that's what I listened to. The Perfect Circle is a democratic band. I'll need to be at Game Stop on June 28th to buy Atelier Iris Eternal Mana anyways. While pondering on my limited choices I've noticed Oddworld: Stranger which is developed by Oddworld Inhabitants, but I wasn't interested. An hour later we walked into the game store in Hudson, WI where I've had bought Lunar - The Silver Star Story Complete for $70 which is rare. Lunar 2 - Eternal Blue wasn't in. The Lunar series is a romantic role playing game originally for Sega CD by Game Arts. If I've got ripped off than so be it!

Games to add to list shall be:

- Lunar - The Silver Star Story Complete (©1999 Kadokawa Shoten)
- Unreal Championship 2 – The Liandai Conflict (©2004 Epic Games)
- Deus Ex 2: The Invisible War (©2003 Ion Storm)
- Sly 2 – Band of Thieves (©2004 Sucker Punch)

Night.

Electronica / Country List 1.5 (2005-06-12 08:04)

These past days I've tried my damniest to stay focused in Guild Wars, but it ended up not working very well. No doubt the game is fun of which there's plenty to do, but there's very nice weather outside. Wisconsin only gets sun and 60° three months out of every year. Otherwise, Wisconsin is from 60° to below freezing the rest of the year. Bob and I might meet up next Tuesday. I can't see Randy since he is helping his friends and himself move to a new house and therefore I'm bored beyond imagination. Meanwhile, I could just find a job, but that means I'll have to put my back into it. There is something about my TV that interests me. I'm another couch potato and not afraid to admit it. SO THERE!

Current Winamp Skin

I've had watched Aviator with Leonardo DiCapito who plays this silly person first working for the Hell's Angels than forms his own aviation company called TWA. TWA was a direct competitor to Pam Am a much bigger aviation company. The guy cracks when his plane he's piloting blows up and the disaster cost TWA millions. He had 3rd degree burns through-out most of his body, but is able to help design the "TWA Tornado" 1950s era jumbo propeller passenger aircraft with his own money. Anyhow, the interesting part is when he talks to himself naked over a projector screen of old airplanes' dog fighting which is disturbing. In my personal opinion, older movies are better at recreating the era(s) of the 1920s and 1950s than Hollywood today!

Friday has gone easy. I hadn't realized I had doubles in my Trance folder so I deleted 500 MB of extras. Bob encoded full Prodigy and Underworld albums on his computer I now own. I like Underworld - Cowgirl the best. I also downloaded more off Kazaa.

Cyberscore now blocks me from posting, because I've had talked poorly about other users or have too silly things to be said about the game industry since we don't see eye to eye after all. The first time I had deleted my account a couple Cyberscore members came over to my forum (Catharton Electronica), and I've lost credibility due to the banding. Today, I've post threads unless the server is down which happens frequently.

Yesterday was 80 degrees and muggy just like today. I've done nothing outdoors. However, a F2 tornado which hit twice in Hammond (6 miles away) destroyed a couple $100,000 worth of property composed of unfinished houses & trees. The tornado was on the evening news showing a couple sky cam shots with an amateur home video included afterwards. There hasn't been a tornado within a 30 mile radius of my house for over a decade. There hasn't been a death toll on the disaster yet.

I haven't been out of my house since Tuesday so I've went forth (2:30 PM CST today) and spent $30 on two videogames I wasn't sure I wanted which was very intelligent of me (sense the sarcasm here?). Contra - Shattered Soldier is the hardest PS2 game up to 2005. Contra games were always hardest. Note: After the 4th level game play starts getting impossible. I also own the best Contra in existence, Contra – The Alien Wars for Super Nintendo. The other purchase was an average choice, Sphinx - The Mummy's Curse which isn't at all exceptional in graphics, control, sound, character design, etc. Meanwhile, I've had burnt two DVDs with game ROMs & dance collection to give to two lucky people I don't know, but must've forgot the dvds at home. You'll see the v1.33 of my videogame list today. I'll tell you how it went once I cheat in Contra. I hate to loose in videogames, but also accept it. Contra - Shattered Soldier is different, because it doesn't play fair at all. I'll be invincible so I can see the ending.

By the way, Eternal Daughters is an interesting freeware game downloadable at Acid Play. There is also another one, wandering-knights of the same caliber. Thirdly, if you like collecting freeware software check out Ahriman's Prophecy. All of these games are freeware RPGs. Knowing some of people here are big fans of lists here are my country and trance collections I listen via computer or portable MP3 player. I've owned the mp3 player for over 2 years, and there isn't any usage for it when I'm home.

Friday, I've completed Stella Deus Gates of Eternity. The strangest aspect of the game was the Phantasy Star style 2D cut-scenes. I've had played the entire game in 6 hours Thursday and Friday. First, the game has been taken over by an overlord than I must save the world (not Earth) from a growing desert. The Sharman protect the living mana things called "spirits", but then the main character decides he won't kill spirits any longer & as a result he tries to open the Gate of Eternity which will stop the ever-growing desert from destroying the planet. Ironically, there is an alchemist in my party, but wasn't necessary to deploy her in every battle. Alchemists are bad news. Afterwards, my party of 8 finds a fake Gates of Eternity somewhere else on the continent. Then gaining 5 spirit bosses (after I hit each one twice), I've defeat the guardians who wanted the world to end guarding the Gates of Eternity. It's impossible for me to loose a mission so my strategy is simple. Send 2 characters left side, 2 characters forward in the middle, with the remaining two characters right side. Five of the six characters use melee attacks. The Sharman was my only ranged character. Each "mission" lasts 2 minutes or less. Just play the game and you'll see.

Today, Randy wanted me to help relocate his TV and DVD collection at his new home in Menomonee, WI. Randy and I haven't seen each other for 3 weeks, but he knew I've had a sport utility vehicle which he said would be perfect for his TV. I've had to leave home without my FM transmitter which broadcasts MP3 signals to FM channels. We've had visitors who weren't Randy's family so there was no music running. His boss from St. Croix Central (high school) was there to help his son also Randy's roommate. However, I was attending private schools those years so he was a complete stranger. In my opinion, Randy has a ditsy girlfriend. Bob's sister Jessie might have wanted to come along. She was in the perimeter just before we left Hammond. O-well. We've talked about the weather; what I was doing

(which is explained here) alone, and why his upstairs floor was poop color (off topic discussion). Bob didn't show up probably because he was working. His schedule was 2pm - 11pm Wednesday thru Monday. For Bob, Tuesdays are his days off so that'll be my chance to ask him. I was worried of getting lost in Menomonee, but I've had found my way to the freeway thanks to signs. On the way home, I was going 70 MPH and a lot of other drivers were going 80 MPH. There were no cops around so I did the same thing.

I went over to Stuff5's software blog and found me a free global internet voice-over-ip client which I like to use in the future called Skype. My username is renegadeviking, and I'm online now. I own a microphone and that's all I need for voice chat. Check it out. I warn you that dial up audio quality of voice-over-ip sucks.

In recent news, IBM was successful at emulating the 733 MHz Pentium 3 in Xbox. The major difficulty was legal battles over NVIDIA's chip so MS is going to license NVIDIA technology in Xbox 360 either by allowing ATI to use patented NVIDIA microchip in the Xbox 360 graphic processing unit in a GPU alliance or creating the extremely expensive technology themselves. Microsoft settled the agreement by giving NVIDIA annual payments every year. NVIDIA is already licensed to manufacture the Playstation 3's graphics chip. I suspect that Playstation 3 will emulate PS2 when it comes out next summer in Japan & North America in September.

I've learned that Nintendo might use a touch pad on Revolution's controller. One Photoshop art of the controller hit the web, but it's fake. The controller will be missing a D-pad so Gamecube games will still use Gamecube controller that'll plug into the right side of Revolution.

I am hoping I'll get broadband next month. Streaming audio stations at 192 kbps while playing online with no latency. Rock Collection v1.1

Day until Xenosaga Episode 2 is completed | Blu-ray okayed H264 Part 10 | Next Gen software costing $70! (2005-06-24 15:05)

The following paragraph is straight off Blu-ray.com. Blu-ray Disc Association (BDA) has announced three months ago that their single layer BD is ready for manufacturing. It works exactly the same as a DVD, but as high tech as HD-DVD. HD-DVD decks will appear before Xbox 360's launch date. BDA is ready to use the MPEG4 AVD codec as their primary video codec. MPEG 4 (also H264 Part 10 is commissioned by ITU Telecommunication Standardization Sector) is compatible with either PCM or MPEG 4 AAC codec. DivX & Xvid add mp3 and OGG Vorbis support. It would be wise to add Xvid to the deck player's firmware in case I want DivX on my LCDTV. It's excellent at halving file size of MPEG2 (H263v2).

On Monday, Silhouette Mirage became my latest addition with me thinking, "Oh man, Treasure usually makes great action games." The other game I've purchased new was Fire Emblem - The Sacred Stone. The franchise has never been 3D until Intelligent Systems developed Fire Emblem for Gamecube which also interests me after couple internet reviews gave the Fire Emblem - The Sacred Stones an 8.5. The noise it makes is amongst GBA's finest. Fire Emblem SNES carts are very hard to get so I had skipped it entirely. I'll try out Top Spin after I complete Xenosaga Episode 2 since that's what I've bought it for.

^ The Stream Ripper plugin

Super Mario Bros Winamp Skin

Streamripper plugin

I've had found a stream-saving plug-in for Winamp 5 accomplishing what Quintessential Media Player is good at. Now, all I need to do is wait for the broadband technicians to come than I'll play online at 1 Mbit or 1.5 Mbits given there isn't a thunderstorm outside.

Yesterday, I am almost finished the 2nd DVD of Xenosaga Episode 2 - Beyond Good and Evil. I haven't met one gnosis yet which are man eating aliens in the first Xenosaga. I made it to the beginning of DVD #2, but my party needs to escape in the DAMMERUNG to the lost planet Old Militia with Zohar on it. Game play glitches are scarce enough to be fun. The city music in the first disc was something I liked. It took me 4 hours to complete the first DVD. Not off this Federation planet yet and 2 hours passed by. I checked the first DVD which was 4.2 GB than the second DVD which was 4.3 GB. Xenosaga Episode 2 has 100 minutes long of spoken 'in game' dialog with English subtitles. PCM does the job well enough for Namco to use it. My idea was Namco's choice of what audio code to use was irrelevant since Xenosaga Episode 2 needs 2 SL-DVDs for storage. Games formatted on DVD-9 would add more stress on the laser degrading it faster so Sony decided to not use dual layer. We've all learned DVD Video has added stress on the laser shorting the lifespan of PS2.

I've had driven to Toyriiffic in Hudson, WI to look at games, but not before 'filling my tank' in River Falls, WI. At Toyriiffic, I almost bought some worthless game like Gundam vs. Zeta. Top Spin (tennis) received excellent internet scores so I chose that. Marcus (who works there often) wasn't available so I gave another guy my largest MP3 DVD out of 3 copies. The conversation with him was about Blu-ray, PS3, Xbox 360, and how Revolution allows ROMs to be downloaded onto its hard drive. We didn't talk about Blu-ray specs. Never-the-less, he spoke of next generation videogames ending up costing $60 - $70! If I can't avoid the inevitable than I'll just live with it.

Games to add to the list

- Silhouette Mirage (©1999 Treasure)
- Fire Emblem - The Sacred Stone (©2005 Intelligent Systems (also Nintendo R & D1))
- Top Spin (©2003 Power and Magic)

See yeah later.

Crusin around Minnesota by myself. (2005-06-30 13:15)

Tuesday, I forgot to ask bob to come over, but was too busy completing Xenosaga Episode 2 (fun, but short game) otherwise he and I would've been going places like seeing Steven Spielberg's movie "War of the Worlds" starring Tom Cruise and Dakota Fanning. Director Steve even uses the script of the radio show of the same name in the 50s making people think a UFO invasion was occurring with some obvious improvements to relate to the times.

Yesterday, I went to Game Stop to pick up Atelier Iris Eternal Mana on its launch day. I was going to get this game one month ago. I've scanned the shelves and some pondering about the best deals vs. best scores. I saw Brothers in Arms for $30, but I knew I wasn't in war themed videogames lately so I hadn't purchased it otherwise I would've. I've heard about Katamari Damacy thanks to X-Play's video review (a G4-Tech-TV show which gave it 5 out of 5) combined with Gameranking.com's score helped my final decision. After hearing about the cashiers at Toyriiffic chatting about R-Type Final being a very cool 2D side scrolling space shooter I've finally purchased it for $14. R-Type has been around since Sega's Master System days (1986 - 1989) when these games were at the height of its popularity. Not even Star Fox is doing well in 2005. Star Fox clearly borrowed heavily from R-Type. Star Fox Assault came out for the Gamecube three months ago, and looks better than your average rail shooter while offering less game play value partially due to close quarter's combat system awfully designed. Thanks a lot Namco for poor production values! I also asked for used copies of Lunar 2 Eternal Blue Complete (wasn't in), Oddworld Stranger's Wrath, and possible RPGs which have been of interest.

On my way home, I was heading north towards Minnesota's capital St. Paul before I had made a quick turn to get onto the 2nd ramp to go east towards my state. The problem was my truck was 2 lanes left of the right ramp so I did a quick maneuver to go the right direction.

My Uncle invited me to his cabin way up north for Independence Day and I won't go this year because I'm stubborn, lazy, and will get a free game out of it. No fireworks = free game! THANK YOU! The fireworks shot up there are state-of-the-art and this year only adults will go. Last July 4th we were on the train tracks when the train was speeding towards us. Organizers below told everyone to get off the tracks whom hadn't listen for whatever reason even after the train passed through. Remembers it like yesterday. There were 50 merit badges selectable and the only place you could earn either the swimming or life saving merit badge required for Eagle Scout. Tomahawk had a commercial kitchen with employees making the scouts' meals three times a day, but my troop cooked ours cause of the metaphor food tasted grouse half the time. Our troop packed in food to avoid the dreaded camp food.

Boy Scouts is an US Congress commissioned organization hence Eagle Scouts are guaranteed to get into the military. It doesn't matter any more ever since I quit. Some Americans think it as a junior army and religious organization because you're in uniform, but the organization is multi-lingual. Tomahawk has a Christian Chapel and an East Orthodox Chapel. I've been there from 1995 - 2001 starting at 11 yrs old.

Last night the power went out from a severe thunderstorm with possible tornado warning. The woods shield me from the worst of the storm. The outage occurred 15 minutes after I unplugged my LCD TV and PC power strips. Meanwhile, I've gotten bored from not being able to watch TV or surfing the Internet so I just crashed. Couldn't sleep well.....tossed and turned all night. It wasn't the lightning that bothered me. I tried to listen to the clock tick tock and sleep to that. The electricity went back on about 3 AM so I woke up....drank two glasses of milk, shut off the lights that were on before the storm and I woke up at 10:30 today.

I've had found the largest 3rd party developer rankings which is difficult to obtain. Sega would have been in 2nd place under Nintendo during the 16-bit era. EA is bigger than Nintendo.

- 1.) Electronic Arts
- 2.) Activision
- 3.) Capcom
- 4.) SEGA (since November 2001)
- 5.) Namco

Hello. Nice piece about Crusin around Minnesota by myself.. I have a music blog that I'm trying to get going myself - just looking for a little inspiration! All I seem to have done so far is declare my undying love for Radiohead, the Killers and a rather large article on Live 8. The is out soon which should be fantastic. It's set to become the biggest selling DVD ever - not surprising really. Anyway, like I said, great blog and I'll be back again soon.

Hammond's F2 Tornado on June 11th (2005-06-30 22:25)

Here are some images from Saturday's tornado six miles away from my house. The Feds came to analyze the damage Sunday and came up with the total. The next day I read it in the local news paper. People and their cameras taken pictures.....wanting to prove there is a tornado. Maybe the weather station picks it up on their Doppler guys? Get shelter why don't yeah? If a tornado hit my house I would be angry at all that software gone to waste. Not only that, but my PCs, LCD TV, and radios would be dysfunctional.

The F2 tornado touched down on the 9th tee of the Hammond Golf Course which is the first place I see when I enter Hammond from Roberts. It took down 20 trees in the golf course. The tornado took a five-mile trip through town. A total of 24 buildings had some damage; only eight had major damage. There were no reports of any injuries. If there was a relief effort and I had money I would donate $20. Right now the damage is covered by people's insurance companies and Wisconsin's natural disaster funds.

Total Damage 3.6 million

Total Deaths: 1 death

Hammond, WI Population: approx 1400 people (not all in town though)

Okay, it was more like 3 miles at one time. That water tower is Roberts.

7.7 July

Firefox getting slower? (2005-07-06 01:04)

On July 3rd, I drove to Shop Ko and bought Kirby Canvas Curse. I've had tried Kirby out and Canvas Curse uses the stylist for a point and touch action game. By touching Kirby with the stylist he'll do a spin attack (like Sonic the Hedgehog). Canvas Curse is single most popular Dual Screen game at Gamerankings. Touch an enemy make him/her dizzy. The music sounds very cute by comparison with Wipeout Pure or Ridge Racer. Kirby Canvas Curse is the highest rated Dual Screen game out so it shall be popular within a few weeks.

Yesterday, I was watching Alien (©1979 Fox) on VHS during the Windows NTFS formatting and installation. The computer aspect of the movie aged nicely. That's also the problem. It feels like the future with a 80s computer twist which the special effects team borrowed from 2001: A Space Odyssey including HAL super computer thing, some of the narrow passages, and that capsule where astronauts sleep in.

Afterwards, according to the Processes tab in Task Manager, Mozilla Firefox 1.0.5 uses twice as much memory as Mozilla Firefox 1.0.4! You'll have better luck waiting for Firefox 1.0.6 when available. It was mentioned on the changes thread that 1.0.5 was slower loading. It's true. I may have to re-install the Guild Wars I've once had thought was my favorite game.

Bob couldn't make it over Tuesday and I'm sad. Sad that we only talked about Blu-ray over MSN messenger and how a burner cost you $1000! BD-RAM concept is obsolete. DVD-RAM was the last of the RAM cartridges.

I've seen "The Thing from Another World" on Turner Movie Classics for the first time. It stars James Arness (very tall guy in Gunsmoke who plays Marshal Matt Dillon.) who plays the monster which looks a lot like the Creature from the Lost Lagoon. The Thing from Another World was above average for 1950 era sci-fi films. Gotta mention its good plot.....which is...well...good. James also starred in four Gunsmoke movies from 1987 to 1992. Gunsmoke - Return to Dodge (1987) had the original Gunsmoke cast members. No matter, I'm not into westerns lately.

I was watching the Minnesota Twins beat the Angels. Twins own the youngest talent in the pro baseball which isn't as talented as half the teams in MLB, but manage to win due to teamwork and good minor league players. Milwaukee Brewers have a bigger salary than the Twins. The Twins have a $40,000,000 salary cap compared to the White Sox's $85,000,000 salary cap. The Twins haven't had a power hitter since Kent Hrbek in '87. Kirby Puckett (1984 - '94) was a line backer who made it to the Hall of Fame. He's most famous for hitting a grand slam in the 11th inning that won the '91 World Series. Twins won dependant every year since 2001 except this season when the White Sox are 'white hot' having one of the best starts in baseball history stealing the central title from the Twins who are 8 games behind.

Conker Live and Reloaded is Conker's Bad Fur Day in discuses and Rareware's biggest title since Star Fox Adventures. I haven't played Conker's Bad Fur Day for N64 yet .I've heard it was very funny. The UK developer released Grabbed by the Ghoulies on Xbox since Rare joined Microsoft Gaming Studios. CL &R could well be mistaken for an Xbox 360 title because it's graphics were a 10/10. I'll sleep on what videogame to purchase next.

On a lighter note, I've beaten R-Type Final already and plays exactly like Gradius V. Short, but amongst the best looking 2D side scrolling shooters. There are only 6 levels, but makes up in length. The boss was hard since I wasn't able to find the weakness unlike the other bosses. R-Type is normally above my skill level so I activated the infinite lives code. There is no pride playing with infinity health. R-Type Final is advancer than most old school side scrolling shooters, because it's new which is more than I can say for the genre at large. Iren never creates anything else other than R-Type. Can't say I love nor hate it.

Thanks for visiting my blog. Come again.

Exciting news! The broadband guys are coming out here either this week or the following week to install a data uplink for 1 Megabit. My father might get 1.5 Megabit free of charge for the rest of July from complimentary of Wild Blue. There is plenty I can download in 10 days before the free service ends.

I'll be man of the house July 16th thru 23rd. My parents are going on a well deserved cruise in Alaska weeks before permafrost hardens. My present for being alone could be broadband...maybe cause nothing is set in stone. I get to be the first to tell how bad PC gaming latency is for dual channel satellites! I shall download the latest version of Linux onto my HDD once connected. Plus, I shall download a few streams; talk to a few people via Skype, but I'll promise this won't affect webpage download time for dial up users.

I have to talk to a DVR consoler about a future computer (AKA networking) job on Friday. He'll ask what my life is like at home. Problem is I'm the laziest person on the Earth, and that's a horrible answer to tell him so today I was pondering for a reasonable answer which would succeed in getting me employed. No one in the right mind would want to stay unemployed for over a year. My strategy is to stay quiet about my Internet addiction or videogames the whole time. Scary are these job interviews. I could tell this man I am setting in front of a TV playing a new videogame every single week never satisfied with my videogame collection or blogging bringing up my point Why bother? I certainly wouldn't be as lazy if working with networks five days a week.

Looked like this shaved.

Yesterday at 0200 hours I've had decided to play open Silpheed - The Lost Planet for the first time and beat it. Satisfying for about 2 hours than Game Over. Without cheating I had a 1 % chance of beating Silpheed. It's THAT hard. I had to add some games that reminded me of a 1990s when games were played more than once. It's one of the worst button mashing on the dual shock you'll come acrosspressing X button a lot shoots bullets from either side of the Silpheed fighter in the 27th century Solar Planetary System. High resolution graphics for 2D shooters aren't common. Once Silpheed is beaten a farewell message stating starting war amongst your own species is meaningless. Earth is extremely fragile in our galaxy and humanity has a choice of existing peacefully after the hero (me) single handedly destroyed an organic treat from another galaxy almost ending all life on Earth!

Right now the next game I'll play shall be R-Type Final, Suikoden IV or Atelier Iris Eternal Mana. Atelier Iris is my 6th Japanese import. Stella Deus wasn't so bad. Maybe this was since I didn't expect Stella Deus to rewrite how strategy RPGs were made therefore couldn't possibly be worse and worth a look. All these imported RPGs have English subti-ties and voiceovers. Atelier Iris is ranked 6th most popular game at gamerankings.com BTW.

New Games to add to list

- Metropolis Street Racer (©2000 Bizarre Creations)
- Mortal Kombat Deception (©2005 Midway)

Buying either iPod Gen4 or Zen Touch today | Ian's Videogame Beaten list (2005-07-14 12:40)

I went to ThreeBlue's blog and looked at the soccer links thinking soccer really isn't that bad. Personally, I buy every Winning Eleven videogame that comes out owning three so far. I've only seen the 3D graphics of the players and stadiums and British announcers talking who plays what position. Videogames are intelligent enough for the announcers to talk more natural adjusting names within their sentences which surprise me WE9 is coming out August 9, 2005 and shall be bought the first week

The AI knows all the game rules and actually plays itself with aggression, but I much rather be USA or Canada or Germany. The AI has improved since WE6. WE6 can easily match the graphics quality and AI of other soccer games from what I've had read. We're on WE8 which improved team play further. Though there are several cosmetic changes, many subtle alterations have taken place under the hood, and they make WE8 a much more challenging game than previous editions. Players also behave more according to their stats, especially in the case of the large group of licensed stars. Each player animation is now more individual, creating the impression that you're seeing a collection of players on field, rather than a team of clones. Each leans into a kick, or spins away from a tackle in a way that seems personal, rather than programmed. An additional benefit is that Konami has noticeably improved the in-game menus. The result is that moving through the game's front end is much more pleasant.

Later today, I was planning to buy an Ipod which is popular, but then I've had heard of its so/so (although better than mine) battery life running on some lithium ion battery. So I decided to go for the Creative Labs Zen Touch 20 GB MP3 player for $220. Apple iPods are great because they have the best sound and above average features and price cuts all the time. Taking 3 seconds longer with a Zen Touch won't bother me because I know I'm getting much better battery life than either my current one or Generation 4 iPod. If I can play MP3s for 25+ hours I'm all for it. I don't need AAC, MP4, WMA, WAV, because that's not what I can find off the Internet. I'm not attacking iPod owners. I'm just telling my point-of-view on the Zen Touch. Afterwards, I was also looking at Cowon iAudio X5 said to offer a 16-bit color LCD, but not as good battery life for $70 more. I saw the NW-HD3, but that wasn't available to me cheaply. Fact remains, if I was getting a 40 GB MP3 player I would've gotten a HP Ipod instead. I've all the songs I wanted to listen to on my current Archos Jukebox 20 (2002 model) filling up 11 GB. I could free up 3 GB on that and put it on my new one use both. If I have a working mp3 player why in the world would I purchase another one? I keep saying better battery life to myself. I'm doing this so I can hear near CD quality music off the internet and take it with me

Today, I am listening to some of the rock music on my external hard drive like Metallica and some country music songs I remember in grade school. I am quite tired now...been up for 14 hours. Saw Star Gate first time in years....which is a boring movie. Then I saw The Man Who Cried starring Christina Ricci about a Russian Jew raised in 1930s UK and moved to Paris where she became a showgirl. That was boring also. Fell a sleep in the chair while watching it.

Wonders what my friends have been doing these pass weeks and when I'll met one of the two again. They're obviously working during mid-day which I understand. Wonders why no one calls me.

I have an employment meeting tomorrow. It'll be about computer jobs in general. I'll try to be polite. I can be rather provocative when it's my decision. I can tell the DVR person what I want, but the truth is I don't know exactly. Not knowledgeable enough about the computer industry. Nervous. Can't think well. Should I bring the game tester / designer comment up or is that a bogus dream of long ago. I have to narrow it down to 5 or less. Difficult.

To top this journal entry off I've decided to release the games I've beaten in my lifetime and that aren't a whole lot. I thought heck it's just text...I could add it to the end and won't matter to the modem.

Games I have beaten are.....

Known Playstation 3 Projects (2005-07-16 10:47)

I don't usually copy paste information on my blog, but this is Playstation 3 software we're talking about! I'm a PS fan like many 20 years olds and have decided to post this seven page long insider on PS3 games from IGN. Playstation 3 looks like it'll be primary a first person shooter gamers' heaven. I'm one of them. Thanks IGN.

6GUN II

Publisher: TBA

Developer: BattleBorne Entertainment

Genre: Tactical Third-Person Shooter

Release Date: TBA 2007

What We Know: Though the first 6GUN isn't even out for the current generation of systems yet, Nevada-based BattleBorne Entertainment is already prepping the PS3 follow-up for 2007. Regrettably little else has been revealed about either game up to this point, so there isn't really much else to talk about. The only remaining details that we know is that the franchise will be similar in concept to THQ's tactical shooter Full Spectrum Warrior and that the PS3 version will run on a brand new proprietary engine that's been codenamed Raptor.

Ian's opinion: I'm more into first person shooters I guess. Okay so all RPGs are 3rd person and I like it them most.

Avalon

Publisher: TBA

Developer: Climax Studios

Genre: Vehicular Shooter

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: The same Brighton team that was responsible for the popular MotoGP series has been working on its first next-generation title for the last two years. Known as Avalon, Climax Studio's PS3 and Xbox 360 combat racer is quickly nearing completion. Running on a combination of the company's Blimey 2 engine and the Tomcat Toolset, Avalon is said to built along the same lines as games such as Twisted Metal and Full Auto, only with piloted vehicles available for the land, sea, and air.

Despite the game's advanced developmental maturity, however, Avalon has still never been seen in any capacity outside of Climax's internal studio. This means that the project's art style, feature set, and conceptual designs are still impossible to know. Nonetheless, Climax has at least confirmed that Avalon will boast a number of popular graphical effects including real-time shading and normal mapping, bloom lighting and vivid rendering, and DYNE physics reactions. Last but not least, Avalon will also support several online networking options for competitive play. Expect to hear more on this one fairly shortly.

Ian's opinion – No comment.

Dark Sector

Publisher: TBA

Developer: Digital Extremes

Genre: Stealth Action

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: The very first next-generation game to actually be seen, Dark Sector is still surprisingly enigmatic. Created by the same team responsible for this year's Xbox favorite Pariah, Dark Sector is a brand new stealth action title that follows an intergalactic spy-type named Hayden. From what we can gather by watching the trailers so far, Hayden is charged with traveling to Pluto so that he and his kind (whoever they may be) can move on to an further mysterious place known as the "Dark Sector." As a stowaway on a really big spaceship, Hayden is guided by an off-screen female controller to help him find whatever it is he's looking for. But just like any good stealth game, Hayden gets discovered.

From that moment on, it appears that our protagonist will have a number of special abilities that can be accessed through the use of his armored suit. Creating force fields, turning invisible, and hacking into other machines so that he can control them are the powers that we've seen so far – and we've even seen a few examples of Hayden telekinetically stealing enemy weapons and employing a dual pistol "bullet time" technique.

Unfortunately, the cold hard facts about Dark Sector are still forthcoming. Whether or not the game plays like Metal Gear Solid or Splinter Cell like the movies suggest are nothing but pure speculation right now. We also don't know what kind of perspective the final game will eventually employ (first, third, multi-angled?) and how much control over hacked machines that you'll gain. Given the relative age of Dark Sector and the fact that there's more footage of the game available than any other confirmed PS3 game, we expect its mysterious status to change rather shortly.

Ian's Opinion – I've had been fan of the Unreal Tournament series since December 1999. Digital Extremes makes first person shooters...probably better ones than iD software could ever make.

The Darkness

Publisher: Majesco

Developer: Starbreeze Studios

Genre: Action

Release Date: TBA 2006

What We Know: Majesco's The Darkness was one of the first next-gen titles that the world found out about, and as a result, we know a little more about this one comparatively. To start, the premise is based on the Top Cow comic book of the same name – telling the story of mafia hitman Jackie Estacado and the curse he's forced to live with.

You see, on Jackie's 21st birthday he's suddenly possessed by an unknown power known as "The Darkness," and from the moment on he finds himself at war with his former employers in the Franchetti crime family and its boss, Cousin Paulie. Naturally, a big part of the game's storyline will be how Jackie struggles with the sentient Darkness while simultaneously battling the Franchettis, as well as fleshing out the backstory of the Darkness itself.

Gameplay is said to be completely non-linear with camera perspectives in both the third and first-person views. Moreover, The Darkness continues the trend of several of the PS3's upcoming titles in that it will boast completely destructible environments – including stages that take place in New York City's slums, harbors, subway tunnels, and rooftops. And as expected, the enemies found within these levels are all inspired by Marc Silvestri's own dastardly creations from the comic book.

For us, the most promising aspect of the game is its development team Starbreeze Studios. The same crew responsible for the excellent Chronicles of Riddick, Starbreeze has shown that it definitely knows how to mix the finer points of technology with strong gameplay. But rather than just rest on its laurels and use an updated version of the Riddick engine for The Darkness, the production team has built an all-new engine specifically for this game. Sounds good to us.

Devil May Cry 4

Publisher: Capcom

Developer: Capcom

Genre: Action

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: Talk about your obscure confirmations. The only thing we know about Devil May Cry 4 at this point is that the line "We are born, the innocent suffer, legends are made, evil is punished" appears as the tagline and that a very high-res Dante is standing in front of an ancient castle obscured by a snowstorm. Everything else about the game is a complete and total secret, and with a release date that has yet to be disclosed there's no telling how long it will be again before we hear anything else.

Ian's Opinion – I have Devil May Cry 1 and 3. Part 4 looks like it takes place after part 3. Wouldn't mind having it in my collection if I could afford PS3.

EA Sports Fight Night Round 3

Publisher: Electronic Arts

Developer: EA Chicago

Genre: Sports (Boxing)

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: One of the best-looking PS3 games on display at Sony's E3 press conference was EA Chicago's boxing sequel, EA Sports Fight Night Round 3. The first and only confirmed PlayStation 3 title by Electronic Arts so far, Fight Night Round 3 had plenty of cool features to show off (like the brand new one-handed push off move and a few new punch animations). But it was the facial features and the emotion shown on top of them that was the biggest hit with the crowd. As an example, both pugilists showed real anger when rearing up for devastating punches and followed them up with expressions of pain, confusion, and arrogance.

Game designer Kudo Tsunoda went on to mention that Round 3 will also boast the best physics of any boxing game to date – with individual reactions to whichever part of the body or face is struck depending on the angle and power of the punch. Gameplay differences compared to the first two titles weren't mentioned, so additions or subtractions in regards to the popular "Total Punch Control" feature are still up in the air.

Eyedentify

Publisher: Sony Computer Entertainment

Developer: TBA

Genre: Camera and Voice-Controlled Adventure

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: With the PS3's multiple technologies it only makes sense to want to use them, and that's exactly what Eyedentify aims to do with uses for both the HD-IP camera and the vocal headset attachment. Judging by the official teaser, the game looks like it will be a similar experience to Konami's PS2 title LifeLine... only this one's a lot more sophisticated.

In it, players will be able to use their headset to vocally command two smokin' hot female agents as they plant bombs, infiltrate places they aren't supposed to go, and perform other secret agent inspired tasks. The cool thing is that the HD-IP camera will allow users to put themselves in the game as well – projecting their captured image into various designated hotspots. How much more there is to Eyedentify than that, we just don't know yet.

Fifth Phantom Saga

Publisher: SEGA

Developer: Sonic Team

Genre: First-Person Shooter

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: Okay, so the idea behind Fifth Phantom Saga intrigues us but we're not exactly sure what to make of it yet. SEGA and Sonic Team's first PS3 title is a first-person shooter that allows players to command a Guyver-like apparition as a supplement to their very capable assault rifle. And while details pertaining to how this guy works are still under wraps, we can tell by the video that the blue specter dude is imperative when it comes to solving environmental puzzles (in the teaser, the apparition deactivates a force field, moves a couple of boxes, and takes care of some enemies out of range in a nearby alleyway). Sadly, that's all we know for now. But on a more entertaining note, did anyone else notice that this is an FPS whose initials are also FPS? No? Okay, so it's just us then.

Final Fantasy 7 PS3

Publisher: Square Enix

Developer: Square Enix

Genre: RPG

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: Much to the dismay of the 2000-plus people in attendance at Sony's E3 2005 press conference, the next Final Fantasy game won't be a remake based on the FF7 Tech Demo used to show off Square's programming chops, but rather an all-new title designed specifically for the PlayStation 3. Confirmed to be in development by Square Enix President Yoichi Wada, the first next-gen FF will likely be Final Fantasy XIII. But until any official details about the story, release date, and mechanics come to light, no other information other the game's eventual existence is currently unknown.

Ian's opinion – I'm a more than average Final Fantasy fan. It's a mainstream game. You're cool if you own this game!

Formula One PS3

Publisher: Sony Computer Entertainment

Developer: SCE Studios Liverpool

Genre: Racing

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: The first of several trailers that showcased the next generation of videogames after Sony Europe's tech demos, Formula One PS3 is one of the most difficult games to judge. Like a few of the other titles on our list, we're still unsure how much of F1's high-speed trailer was real or rendered. But regardless of the truth, it still gave us a good idea of what to expect in game's the final version (such as drivers celebrating their victories with champagne after a race and axles breaking individually while taking bad turns). Sony Europe is also claiming that when completed, Formula One will make groundbreaking advances in AI and physics calculations – and if the whole thing turns out anything like the trailer, we'll believe it.

The Getaway PS3

Publisher: Sony Computer Entertainment

Developer: SCE Studios Soho

Genre: Action

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: In the UK, Sony's The Getaway franchise is one of the most successful PS2 series around. And with the announcement that there's already a PS3 version of the game in the works, our European buddies have been begging us for new information since the news of its existence first hit. Sadly, there's really nothing to report about it right now other than the fact that the early movies of the game's environments are stunningly beautiful. Almost an exact replica of London's Regent Street, the single stage that Sony showed off at its E3 press conference was almost photo-realistic. We can only hope that the gameplay will match.

Heavenly Sword

Publisher: Sony Computer Entertainment

Developer: Ninja Theory

Genre: Action

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: Originally thought to be an Xbox 360 game by Microsoft fans, Heavenly Sword is in all actuality a PlayStation 3 exclusive. Developed by the same team that did the quirky party-oriented actioner Kung Fu Chaos, this next generation ninja drama follows a warrior woman with only a few days left to live. Before she dies, the girl decides to enact one last good deed by taking out a ruthless king and his invading army. Along the way players will explore a multitude of environments that include wasted battlefields, forested treetops, watery rivers, and even the heavens themselves.

The most interesting aspect of Heavenly Sword, though, is its complex battle system and enemy behavior. As not only will each enemy employ a number of multifaceted cinematic attacks, but the heroine herself will be able to battle them via an innovative freestyle combat system. This means that not only will the she-ninja be able to swap between multiple sword types and other weapons on the fly, but also be able to engage her foes in one-on-one battles, dozen-enemy skirmishes, or even take on several thousand soldiers at once. Players can expect a state of the art physics system and destructible landscapes as well.

I-8

Publisher: Sony Computer Entertainment

Developer: Insomniac Games

Genre: First-Person Shooter

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: For proof that the guys at Insomniac love first-person shooters, all you have to do is look at their history. The group's very first videogame, after all, was the PSOne classic Disruptor, and last year's Up Your Arsenal and the forthcoming Ratchet: Deadlocked are both very heavy on the FPS elements. But with its initial PlayStation 3 blaster simply entitled I-8, Insomniac has finally gotten the chance to create its first full-fledged shooter since Disruptor debuted almost ten years ago.

One of the few PS3 trailers from Sony's E3 press conference that's actually running in real time, I-8 (not the final title, but a codename to represent the fact that it's Insomniac's eighth project) looks like a cross between Call of Duty and DOOM. There are dozens of allied soldiers on the screen at the same time, and plenty of bizarre-looking alien things for them to battle against. Of the stages shown (a village, several forest areas, abandoned roadways), each and every one seems to have some sort of limited environmental destructibility and the end of the trailer boasts a very cool Starship Troopers-like spider creature. Sadly, details outside of the video teaser just don't exist yet.

Ian's Opinion - I happen to own Half-life 2 and had beaten it by myself without God mode on. This game looks a lot like Valve's masterpiece. This game won't have the game play of Half-life 2 because it rocked, but it's probably be a 8.5 out of 10 game.

Infraworld

Publisher: TBA

Developer: Quantic Dream

Genre: Action

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: One of two confirmed PlayStation 3 games that Quantic Dream is currently building, Infraworld is one of the most mystifying titles on our list. In fact, the game is so shrouded in secrecy that we know absolutely nothing about its storyline, visual style, or concept. The only thing we do know is that it runs on Quantic's proprietary next-gen gaming engine and that it features AGEIA's recently popular accelerated physics technology. We also know that Infraworld boasts "action-oriented features" of some sort. Celebration!

Killing Day

Publisher: Ubisoft

Developer: TBA

Genre: First-Person Shooter

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: Ubisoft's only confirmed PlayStation 3 title joins dozens of other games in being mysterious. Granted, we don't know very much about Killing Day right now, but that doesn't mean that there isn't at least a little bit to talk about. The game's focus, for instance, is obviously going to be that of a first-person shooter with a gruff and tattooed lead character. Additionally, the environments appear to be highly destructible (exploding popcorn carts anyone?) and the enemies bleed a whole lot when you shoot them. Also confirmed is the ability to dual-wield certain pieces of your arsenal (including the only revealed weapon thus far, automatic handguns) and a level that resembles a three-story mall. See? We told you there was stuff to talk about!

Killzone PS3

Publisher: Sony Computer Entertainment

Developer: Guerilla Games

Genre: First-Person Shooter

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: It's currently unknown if Killzone PS3 will eventually become Killzone 2 or something else entirely, but one thing's for sure: the war with the Helghast will definitely continue on the PlayStation 3. Rather than just recreate the gameplay elements of the first Killzone while giving it a better coat of paint, however, developer Guerilla Games is already working on specific mechanical improvements to make it a more complete experience.

Interaction between you and your NPC cohorts, for example, will be a lot more realistic. People will help each other during battle by dragging the injured out of a firefight or by tossing you an extra weapon if you run out of ammo. Characters will be entirely aware of their environment and surroundings too, and they'll even have sophisticated adaptation behaviors that help them respond to problems on the fly. Finally, all of these reactions will be played out emotionally on each of your teammate's faces and the direction of the action will be a lot more cinematic along the way.

But that's not all. A few other gameplay tidbits have been confirmed as well. The progression of each level, for instance, will be completely non-linear and will boast a number of destructible objects and environments. Additionally, users will be able to command a multitude of vehicles through the land, sea, and air, and even be able to customize the specifics of their online play.

Despite the above details, however, the biggest controversy about the game has been the nature of the drop-dead gorgeous trailer that ran at Sony's E3 press conference. Is it real-time or is it rendered? The official answer from SCEA Vice President Jack Tretton is that it was real and actual gameplay, but SCEA Executive VP of Development Phil Harrison has stated that some of the trailers during the presentation were rendered using in-game assets. We're leaning towards Harrison's answer right now until we can play the game for ourselves - but either way, the trailer rocked.

Ian's Opinion - Looks Good. Also a first person shooter so the likely hood of me interested is a lot. May not be my first PS3 game, but could be one of my first three purchases!

Metal Gear Solid 4

Publisher: Konami Digital Entertainment

Developer: Kojima Productions

Genre: Stealth Action

Release Date: TBA 2007

What We Know: The most popular PS3 game to come out E3 2005 was undoubtedly Metal Gear Solid 4. In development by Hideo Kojima's newly-formed creation studio Kojima Productions, MGS4 will take place three years after Sons of Liberty and introduce a game concept not yet explored by the series: "nowhere to hide." Additionally, there will be an online battle mode included for the final version and Solid Snake will be the main character once again. Remaining details about the game are harder to find than Snake using a cloaking device, but press materials have confirmed at least seven more characters that will appear. Vamp, Meryl Silverberg, Revolver Ocelot, Otacon, and Raiden are the ones we can recognize without any trouble, while two remaining players look eerily similar to Big Boss and Naomi Hunter. In a recent interview with IGN, Kojima also acknowledged that the first official trailer provides several hints regarding MGS4's eventual gameplay mechanics – the Russian symbol on Snake's uniform and the use of disguises were the moments we found most interesting. Of course, we still have a long way to go before we learn any more.

Mobile Suit Gundam

Publisher: Bandai

Developer: TBA

Genre: Unknown

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: Bandai knows how to keep quiet, as next to nothing about the PlayStation 3 version of Mobile Suit Gundam is known right now. To be truthful, the only thing we can really confirm is that a Gundam of some type will be in it – that's about it. Naturally, we think that Sony's E3 press conference may provide some clues as to what to expect, with the appearances of GM Mobile Suits, multiple Zakus, a Gun Tank, a Zaaf Custom, and the RX-78 among them. But can we assume that all of these units will make the final roster? Does all the gunfire mean that the game will be shooting-oriented in nature? Frankly, we'll just have to wait to find out.

MotorStorm

Publisher: Sony Computer Entertainment

Developer: Evolution Studios

Genre: Racing

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: Developed by the WRC team at Evolution Studios, MotorStorm was one of the biggest hits of Sony's 2005 E3 press conference. Though questions swirl about how much footage was in-game and how much was rendered, the trailer itself was still one of the most impressive PS3 displays we've seen. Plus, the fact that the game is 100 % PlayStation 3 exclusive is enough to garner even more interest.

As for the gameplay, the teaser hints at some truly vicious off-road racing (which the development team has also confirmed as "brutal"). The environment will play a big role in the progression of a race too, as mud, grit, and oil changing the landscape on a regular basis. What's more is that players can choose whatever vehicles they want and pit them up against whatever opponents they want – ATVs, dirt bikes, sand rails, monster trucks, rally cars, and a bunch of other unnamed vehicles among them. Expect plenty of horseplay and an absolute disregard for rules.

Ni-Oh

Publisher: KOEI

Developer: KOEI

Genre: Action

Release Date: Summer 2006

What We Know: Formerly known as Akira Kurosawa's Oni, Ni-Oh is KOEI's first PS3 title and is being described as "the ultimate in historical action." What that actually means is anybody's guess, but given KOEI's history with games like Dynasty Warriors, Samurai Warriors, and Crimson Sea, you can bet that Ni-Oh will have lots of guys onscreen with plenty of hacking and slashing to go along with them.

In fact, the official E3 trailer alluded to this very type of gameplay, as the blonde-haired / blue-eyed main character sliced the living crap out dozens of Japanese warriors. Blood was shed and combos were everywhere. The most interesting moments of that teaser, though, were the bizarre bull-like creatures that were fighting against the humans. What are they? Where are they from? And will they have any bearing on the gameplay other than just being enemies?

Right now, we just don't know.

Publisher: TBA

Developer: Quantic Dream

Genre: Unknown

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: Like Quantic Dream's other game InFraworld, almost nothing about Omikron 2 has publicly been revealed. Screenshots, movies, and technology demos don't even exist yet because the game is still in its conceptual and design doc stages. In fact, the only thing about Omikron 2 that its production team will confirm is that it's currently in development for the PC, PS3, and Xbox 360, and that it will run on Quantic's proprietary next-gen game engine. The original Omikron was released way back in 1999 for the Dreamcast and PC, and started the likeness and music of David Bowie. It mixed just about every single genre conceivable at the time but was primarily a first-person RPG. Whether Omikron 2 will continue that sort of direction is as of yet, still unknown.

Possession

Publisher: TBA

Developer: Blitz Games

Genre: Real-Time Strategy

Release Date: TBA 2007

What We Know: It's quite possible that Blitz Games' Possession is the PS3 title that we know the most about. Not scheduled for release until sometime in 2007, the zombie-themed RTS pays homage to several well-known films about the undead. Possession's storyline, for instance, is ripped right out of 28 Days Later; as it follows four activists into a secret research facility where they unwittingly unleash deadly chemicals that turn them into flesh-eating zombies. Afterwards, players take control of the leader (known as "The Enslaver") and use him to command a legion of rotting corpses against the city in an effort to ruin the world. Happy times, no?

The city itself will be pretty expansive (measuring eight kilometers long and six kilometers wide) and boast three main neighborhoods: the suburbs, downtown, and the corporate district. The whole goal of the game is to infect as many humans as possible so they'll join your army, which you can then use to kill more people, grow bigger, and repeat. Along the way you'll be met by the military, police officers, and plenty of other concerned citizens who just so happen to boast weapons like machine guns, pistols, and rocket launchers. Additionally, controls will be simple and are to be designed specifically around the use of a gamepad, and your victims will transform into five specific zombie types.

Possession's most basic type, will be the shambler – the slow-moving clumsy dead dude that we're all familiar with. Next up are the runners who, like the bad guys of 28 Days Later, can move at high speed and will be able to compete with even the fastest escaping human. Moving forward, Bloaters are essentially walking zombie bombs that explode with infectious destruction when they reach their targets, and shredders can restructure their own flesh to become deadly pack hunters that can climb any surface. This class also has an unusual first-person mode can be used to identify various enemy threats, so you can think of them as your Special Forces units. The last undead class is known as "The Monster," and is for all intents and purposes, a 10-foot tall zombie tank. And while monsters can throw cars and crowds of people around with almost no effort at all, they can't infect people with the zombie virus as other divisions can. There you have your trade-off.

The final aspects to Possession are what we'd expect in any next-gen zombie game – environments are destructible, neighborhoods live and breathe in a similar way to the Grand Theft Auto games, and there's a definite online multi-player component. The only questions that remain are the finer points: How good will it look and how fun will it be? Luckily, the next two years should hold the answer.

Project Delta

Publisher: TBA

Developer: Playlogic International

Genre: Tactical First-Person Shooter

Release Date: TBA 2006

What We Know: Pretend for a moment that you're an elite soldier thrust into the middle of an alien invasion and you have the general premise of Playlogic's Project Delta. Originally planned as a PS2 and Xbox game, development was switched to next-gen late last year when the team realized that its ambitions were far too big for current platforms (Onimusha flashbacks anyone?). Despite this move to superior hardware, though, Playlogic maintains that one of its coolest features is the narrative written by the same guy that did the Broken Sword series. The team is also pretty high on the alien races themselves known as the Cryzen (made up of fluid metal bodies) and the Dorian (bald armored dudes).

Eventually the storyline gets a little more complicated when your main character is forced to travel 700 years into the past and battle alien enemies to change your planet's fate. Part of the fun here will be figuring out which encountered characters are foes and which ones are allies – not to mention the level of strategy needed to tactically command your troops ala Rainbow Six. Each of your squadmates will have emotional responses to how you treat them during orders too, and they'll even be able to learn new skills and remember your behavior as the game goes on.

Tekken 6

Publisher: Namco

Developer: Namco

Genre: Fighting

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: Of all the confirmed PlayStation 3 games out there, Tekken PS3 is one of the most mysterious. Developed once again by the graphics experts at Namco, this latest edition of "The King of Iron Fist" will feature Jin Kazama and appear on the PS3... and that's about all there is to tell. Additional cast members, storyline details, and everything else about the game is still shrouded in secrecy (though we did hear one Japanese Namco rep mention that Tekken PS3 will be a fighter and not a Death by Degrees-type action game, so that's good news).

Vision GT

Publisher: Sony Computer Entertainment

Developer: Polyphony Digital

Genre: Racing

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: The Gran Turismo series has been one of the most successful franchises in the history of Sony's PlayStation, and if the past proves anything, Vision GT should continue that trend pretty effectively. Unfortunately, details about the gameplay are almost zero right now but at least we do know that Series Producer Kazunori Yamauchi wants to include real world collisions during crashes for the PS3 sequel – but whether Yamauchi's hope becomes a reality when Vision GT eventually ships, however, remains to be seen.

It should be noted that for the purposes of the E3 trailer, Polyphony Digital ran Gran Turismo 4's car models and stages through the rough equivalent of early PS3 hardware to give viewers a general idea of what the next-gen GT could be like. One peak at El Capitan and the GT4 logos on the pit crew are enough to give that away. The most significant aspect of that trailer, though, is the fact that more than 20 cars were shown onscreen at the same time – more than double GT4's current limit on the PlayStation 2.

Ian's Opinion – I find Gran Turismo 4 fun. If they don't change the game play and improve graphics and sound than that is enough. The Dual Shock 3 resembles the dual shock 2 enough where it would play a lot like GT4. If Polyphony Digital chooses blu-ray Gran Turismo 3 A-Spec and Gran Turismo 4 should be freebees!

Warhawk PS3

Publisher: Sony Computer Entertainment

Developer: Incognito Entertainment

Genre: Unknown

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: In the pre-production stages for quite some time, Warhawk PS3 is the follow-up to 1995's futuristic PSOne flight game of the same name. In the original, players took control of aviation partners Hatch and Walker as they piloted an experimental aircraft against the formidable forces of a madman named Kreele. How this storyline ties into the events of the new Warhawk (and whether or not the valuable Red Mercury substance will make its return) is still unknown. All that's confirmed at this point is that the game is being developed by the remnants of the original SingleTrac production team at Incog and that's about it. Nonetheless, the official E3 2005 Sony press conference trailer did hint that air and ground-based missions could both be a possibility (just watch the tactical shooter-like intro for proof).

Untitled DICE Projects (2)

Publisher: Electronic Arts

Developer: Digital Illusions CE

Genre: Unknown

Release Date: TBA 2006/TBA 2007

What We Know: The Battlefield 1942 guys are already working on two PlayStation 3 games for the 2006/2007 shopping seasons, but that's about the only thing we know. Early speculation points to both of these titles being extensions of the Battlefield universe, but with no concrete proof it's nothing more than wishful thinking right now. The one thing we do know, however, is that the first next-gen game will be a port of a PS2 and Xbox title of the same name and that it will be released in late 2006/early 2007. The second game will be exclusive to the PS3 and Xbox 360 platforms and will hit store shelves before the end of 2007. Both titles are to be developed by DICE's Swedish studio.

Untitled KOEI Projects (2)

Publisher: KOEI

Developer: TBA

Genre: Unknown

Release Date: TBA

What We Know: Confirmed to be in development by Director and Chief Advisor Kou Shibusawa at Sony's E3 press conference, two additional PlayStation 3 titles other than Ni-Oh are currently in production. No details about the pair were given, except that KOEI considers them both "large titles," and that they will present "all new kinds of entertainment." Let the guessing games begin!

3.9 Terabyte HVD DISC in the making! Holy Crap (2005-07-19 10:03)

After searching Google on information on the generation after Blu-ray & HD-DVD I've come up with Holographic Versatile Disc. The 2x HVD-ROM is 40 times faster than a 16x DVD-ROM. It'll be able to read CDs and DVDs. The HVDs use a blue-green laser. I could fit my console and PC games + my whole mp3 collection on 1 HVD with space left over. The project is financed by the HVD Alliance with Toshiba as the primary investor. The companies who invested in HVD are:

- CMC Magnetism Corporation
- Fuji Photo Film Co., Ltd.
- Konica Minolta Optical, Inc.
- Mitsubishi Kagaku Media Co., Ltd.
- EMTEC (MPO International)
- Nippon Paint Co., Ltd.
- Toshiba Corporation
- Optware Corporation
- Pulstec Industrial Co., Ltd.
- Ovalrock
- Software Architects, Inc.
- Toagosei Co., Ltd.

HVD uses a 532nm blue green laser at a .125 Gigabyte/second transfer rate. 16x DVDs transfer 1350 kB/s. HVDs bothers me because I've only been able to burn on DVDs within the last 16 months. Consumer HVDs will start appearing in 2007 at the cost of Blu-ray is now. You could fit 213 full DVD movies on that very one disc according to Wikipedia. Wikipedia quotes, "the books in one of the largest libraries in the world, the US Library of Congress, contain about 20 terabytes of ANSI text." If US congress hires people to transfer book text into digital text for Internet all day is beyond me, but it seems like a realistic assumption. Someone who can afford the really expensive HVD burner burns the information on DL-HVD (3.9 GB) - data would be outdated within weeks. The world is ready for HVD. Nero Burning Rom 6 supports DL-HD-DVD and DL-Blu-ray discs already. I was like...Wow! Historical data is okay, but other data that changes a lot shall be kept on CD or DVDs. My Cisco books are illegal to bring to my college class. The information in them is still good, but not bleeding edge any longer. Brings up my thought of downloading free Linux. I tend to play around with Knoppix a lot. I stopped installing Suse or Redhat partitions on my HDD fore I fell in love with LiveCDs Sunday, I've installed Doom 3 and Battlefield 2 onto my hard drive after I've bought BF2 at Target at 1 AM Saturday. Downloaded and installed the newest patch (v1.2) for Battlefield 2. I went into the single player campaign and couldn't find a way get out of the spectator mode. What I needed was in-your-face action! I selected my Special Forces rifle and platoon (bots) than the enemy's platoon, but the game began without me! Battlefield 2 gives me control of GIs, aircraft, boats, tanks, "2 1/2", gun turrets, and all the 21st century weapons. After spending 15 minutes figuring out how to start fragging....I just gave up. This FPS looks fun BTW. Six months ago I've played Call of Duty. It's probably something very simple. Something I can solve if I tried.

Saturday night, my mother required a memory stick /w more storage for my 3.3 Megapixel camera. She'd bought the Memory Stick Pro so I had to reinsure that she bought the memory stick instead. I got to install that 256 MB memory stick into my USB thumb drive!

That employment interview didn't happen Friday. An important person required to make the magic happen wasn't available. She had urgent business to attend to. A pain in the ass was what it was.

When I was in the DVR building, my dad was speaking to my employment consoler about the state of Germany in the 60s. The reason why I am living today is my father hadn't gone to Vietnam in the beginning. Afterwards, my dad got into a conversation about late 80s Internet because it loosely had to do with industrial networking now-a-days. The network techies haven't come to my house to install Wild Blue (two way satellite service) yet. I hate the county.... here I am with twelve days left in the month with no broadband access!

[2.5 hours later] Aunt Lois and I came back from New Richmond after not finish seeing War of the Worlds. I was staring at some sophomores and I've heard them chatting about that guy behind them who was looking at them (me). Yes, I was looking at them because it's been very long since I've seen 16 yrs olds do their "girlie chat." I wanted to say hello, but feared my aunt would see me talking to sophomores. They didn't know me, but I could have sworn I've had heard, "that man's face looks like that blog I was looking at." I must've been thinking that thought which scared the jebbers out of me. I've heard words "barely ahead" over and over again so I left and the words in my head went away. It was 15 minutes into the War of the Worlds when Tom Cruise just saw "encounters of the 1st kind" in the sky. I told my aunt that I chickened out. At home, I called Bob (my pal) who was driving to work from New Richmond unlike normal.

Brand new videogames:

- Star Wars Battlefront (©2005 Lucas Arts)

Resident Evil 5 (2005-07-24 04:49)

I've seen Resident Evil 5 screenshots for Playstation 3. There isn't enough screenshots, but I believe that it could be either Iraq or Mexico. The buildings look concrete and that's popular in Mexico, South America or Middle East. That guy in the screenshots (quite possibly the main character) could be Chris Redfield from Resident Evil 1. Don't take my word for it, but it does show off the Playstation 3 doesn't it? RE5 is quite comparable to graphics of the PC version of Half-life 2. I got these off Residentevilfan.com. I will have enough money to afford PS3 in August 2006. This doesn't relate to how game plays since that'll be the key to it's success. Resident Evil 4 for Gamecube didn't have full motion video except for the opening movie. RE4 plays like any modern survival horror game like Fatal Frame 2 or Silent Hill 4.

Bought Super G router and 4 Super G NICs for $320 (2005-07-28 19:49)

Today, I drove into Woodbury to buy some videogames including a tactical RPG called Makai Kingdom: Chronicles of the Sacred Tome and Mega Man X5. Makai Kingdom was a strange Japanese game scoring 7.5 out of 10 so without thinking I had bought it. All I did was visit GameStop.com and saw the just arrived box.

Yesterday, I knew the installation date on my broadband service - August 5th. Dad is buying one fairly expensive 802.11 Super G router (Netgear WPN824 + 3 Super G WiFi NICs + 1 802.11G CT card for laptops.) I found out about Super G while looking on the internet two days ago. Super G is 108 Megabits instead of 54 Megabits. All the equipment cost my dad $320. We had to have wireless in our house. CAT5 is too clumsy to network where I live. Having increased freedom to move about is great. The new router has an internal antenna and the newest technology (Multiple In Multiple Out with 128-bit WIP encryption and signal bending technology.) The satellite modem requires MIMO support. I won't need to worry about mixed B/G single reduction because every computer gets it's very own Super G network card!

My Super G Router

Most people don't own or require WiFi networks even though everyone here knows WiFi networks are popular. Do you realize I had a CAT4 HUB in my house before and the network coming to my house is over 10 times faster! I'll spare you the details.

Bob didn't visit me last week. I told him about August 5th over the instant messenger and he gave me thumbs up on that. Bob has a 1.5 Megabit connection. Then I told him about not owning a webcam. He has one and shares his face over the internet via Yahoo Messenger. I am use to seeing webcam slideshows of him over dialup.

[One day later] I met with the IT consolders and we talked about possible job situations. This Norwegian person called Sonya and she'll help me get a job wherever. It could be web design. I could be making gaming sites for customers. I was actually not hyper or interruptive, but a gentleman in front of those people. Was this smart of me? Possibly. I starred into her eyes to see if she would back out and she wouldn't. Allen was the other guy, but just a supervisor although he commented.

well ive gotta say that your blogs are pretty remarkable..yeah..ive got some cool postings too...you might as well gimme some smart kick-ass comments bout my blogs and stuffs..lol solve your money problems for good! (2005-11-06 12:34:00)

Congratulations on a very well written, interesting and surperb blog!

Hi I am a "bot" who works for Scott. I never complain or cry that I work too hard and I try to write my very best compliment on each deserving blog. Some times I repeat myself so please excuse me if I have complimented you more than once as I am here to please you and I would like for you to check out Scott's webpages. They deal with stuff like, click here: solve your money problems for good! and then feel free to e-mail me or Scott with your words of wisdom.

P.S. I'll sure put the word out about your site and I would appreciate any business you may send our way...

Later, Scott's bot ;-)

golf testing equipment (2005-12-18 17:15:00)

Sad to say I just got back from a bowling tournament and decided to log in and do some websurfing. Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site I love your blog. I had some very good laughs. I am doing a paper on seattle golf equipment and have been downloading information for the last hour. I don't know how I came across Bought Super G router and 4 Super G NICs for $320 but I am glad I did. It has set me back a little because I have spent the last hour reading your archives. If you don't mind I would like to add you to my favorites so I can back again and read some more. Well I need to get back to seattle golf equipment . I am almost finished with it. Great job.

p.s some very good points on your blog

golf equipment organizers (2005-12-19 18:30:00)

Hi Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site your blog is really great! Wow :-) As I was out blog surfing and surfing the web for detailed info on golf equipment closeouts I stumbled across your blog. Obviously my search landed me here and it is a little off subject compared to Bought Super G router and 4 Super G NICs for $320, but I am certainly glad I did come across your blog. Did I already tell you I like it! If you would not mind, I would like to add your link to my "favorites" page to come back and read again sometime. Should you ever need it, there's lots of information on this site about golf equipment closeouts. Again, great blog and keep up the great work!

wheelchair battery (2005-12-30 14:33:00)

I liked your information in best.. Too bad it doesn't have more on odyssey battery. I was looking for odyssey battery in my area. Enjoyed reading what you have. I'll check back later when I get some spare time next week. Thanks Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site.

Saw Randy on Sunday | Gmail over Floppies | free vs. Commerical Word Processors | Satellite ISP vs. WiMax ISP (2005-08-02 04:29)

I invited Randy over to my house after a month of no visits. Randy's my friend. I showed him 15 new games he hasn't seen before...piled all of it on his lap. Randy sold his old Cadillac so that he could buy a used Saab 9-5 which looked nice. Saab is Swiss. It had a leather interior and a Turbo V6 and costs him $50 a month more than his other car. Randy also owns a pickup. Then down in my room we played ESPN NHL 2K5 on Xbox. The Minnesota Wild suck so I didn't play them cause they're almost the worst team in the National Hockey League. He was the Buffalo Sabres against me the Denver Avalanche. Randy found out how to score on me in the first half, but I gained 3 goals by the 3rd half and the game was over. He was into racing so we played Forza Motorsport. Randy hasn't heard of this game yet. Its Xbox's best racing game I told him. He sort of liked it...forcing him to like it. Cars involved were from Class B, Class S, and Class R race cars. I remember racing Ferraris (Class S) and Le Mans (Class R) race cars in the game. We each won 2. Afterwards, we played Gran Turismo 4. I couldn't decide which was better. In my opinion, Forza Motorsport was better, but he thought GT4 was better. He owns a PS2 so his opinion stands to reason.

I drove Randy to the new Best Buy in Woodbury. It's no longer connected to Game Stop. On the way there we listened to Kansas, Ride on Bald Mountain, Steppenwolf, Black Sabbath, Rolling Stones and country including Garth Brooks - The Dance. Best Buy wasn't open. Game Stop wasn't open either. Wonder if business is too tight on Sundays?

I registered for fall classes online. One is Cisco 1 while the other is Visual Basic 1. Failing isn't an option either. If I do fail I'll have to take this stupid class over again. Prays to God to pass both What makes me mad is there is only one choice in industrial networking. There was suppose to be a math course enlisted. I wish school wasn't so hard, and I am going to work hard to pass both! Last year/semester Cisco was one of my classes. I kept walking out because somebody made me mad otherwise I would've passed. I choose the same instructor as before, Joyce. Jeff was an assistant instructor explaining networking, but he teaches his own Cisco class now. I don't like him as much if I remember correctly.

My next entry should cover the installation of broadband in my house. I'll take pictures of everything. The Tigerdirect package should arrive tomorrow at the latest.

Gmail is #1 floppy replacement.

Floppies have been used since the 80s and are becoming extinct. I used them for quite a bit before the cd-burner. Game Saves, JPEG, ROMs, DOCs, website files. Heck I was using WINZIP since 1996. It shocked me when I first used writeable CDs, they're not as user-friendly as floppies, but held much more data. Floppy disks are as easy to use as hard disks or usb drives, but CDs had to be burned onto /w Windows Explorer. Some people learned to backup their information to their Email or FTP server given to by their ISP. I know it's possible with 2 Email accounts, but can you self send emails using 1 account? Gmail has 2.3 GB and Yahoo has 1 GB of free space & serve as the ideal 21st century floppy replacement. As we come to age with battery powered 40 GB & 80 GB hard drives (AKA MP3 players). Will these lithium ion powered HDD replace the pocket sized USB thumb drive? Probably. I own two already and have used them for data other than music before.

Not to mention the increased on unneeded CPU power from PC. You really don't need much more than 2 GHz CPU to do daily computing tasks. The final point is that such a machine probably wouldn't be cheaper than a normal PC anyway. Economies of scale kick in here, such cut down machines could be popular but their inflexible nature would mean that businesses wouldn't touch them and many home users wouldn't trust them either. So you end up with a machine that's not too dissimilar to a low spec current model that still has to have a profit margin on top and that's marketed as a "not so full featured" machine as the XP box next to it.

Open source vs. Commercial Word Processor dilemma

Abiword is pretty good. Spellcheckers not as nice, but average which is perfectly suitable for most people. I have three office suites on my computer MS-Office 2003, Openoffice.org 1.9.118 and Abiword 2.2.9. Abiword is 5 MB. Two are free and one isn't.

List of programs in Openoffice.org Office Suite

1. OpenOffice.org Calc is a spreadsheet application that you can use to calculate, analyze, and manage your data. You can also import and modify Microsoft Excel spreadsheets.

OpenOffice.org Calc provides you with functions, including statistical and banking functions, that you can use to create formulas to perform complex calculations on your data.

2.) In OpenOffice.org Base, you can access data that is stored in a wide variety of database file formats. OpenOffice.org Base natively supports some flat file database formats, such as the dBase format. You can also use OpenOffice.org Base to connect to external relational databases, such as databases from MySQL or Oracle.

3.) OpenOffice.org Impress lets you create professional slide shows that can include charts, drawing objects, text, multimedia and a variety of other items. If you want, you can even import and modify Microsoft PowerPoint presentations.

4.) OpenOffice.org Math provides numerous operators, functions and formatting assistants to help you create formulas. These are all listed in a selection window, in which you can click the required element with the mouse to insert the object into your work.

5.) OpenOffice.org Writer is the word processor. The setup is similar to Coral Word Perfect.

My Conclusion – Download Openoffice.org immediately and use it when you want too.

WiMax (Institute of Electrical and Electronic Engineers' 802.16d)

WiMax is a wireless MAN standard. It won't be available in my area for some time so instead of WiMax ISP rural citizens are buying satellite equipment for Wild Blue's ISP in Colorado. WiMax is cheaper because TCP/IP travels via digital waves instead of microwaves, but some WiMax subcontractor wouldn't come to our town and build a WiMax broadcast tower outside of town for at least another 4 years! Rural folks could benefit from cheaper internet, but the truth is the county sponsored Wild Blue first.

WiMax better have a lot of guts to come out here and convince us to switch ISPs. That's all I have to say about it. Australia seems to be more into WiMax than Wisconsinites. It won't reach my house in 2 days!

Trees cause delay! (2005-08-07 14:47)

Yesterday, I was playing ESPN NHL 2K5, Legend of Zelda Collector's Disc and Metroid Prime 2 Echoes. In NHL 2K5 I was playing the '81 North Stars against the MN Wild or more accurately a dream match. There was no Mets Hockey Arena so I played in the Excel Energy Center. I also played the Russians vs. Wild in E.E.C. I lost because the Wild defenders kept blocking my shot. Afterwards, I played Legend of Zelda (NES) on Gamecube, died early in the game twice, ejected the disc and then played Metroid Prime 2 for over 2 hours. I forgot that Metroid Prime 2 was this much fun. Retro Studios is full of talent. I got to the part of the game where Samus finds the intergalactic marines' transport spaceship although advancing was impossible since I didn't scan enough stuff with her heads up display visor.

On July 30th, I requested Breath of Fire IV to come to the local store so I could buy it. Problem is I can and can not afford it at the same time. It's a matter of choosing to pay for another PS1 game. I am looking forward purchasing Lunar 2 Eternal Blue Complete. I much rather pay $50 for that game than Breath of Fire IV except I won't see BoFIV at the game store cause it's very popular. First rate pick in fact. I've had found out Lunar 2 was better than Lunar. Lunar 2 was remade by Game Arts. Lunar was made by Kadokawa Shoten.

Thursday, I didn't get my broadband due to trees blocking the Wild Blue satellite's 30° transmission and would be lost above 34°. Dad fired up the chainsaw today and removed three trees and will allow St. Croix Tree Service to remove the remaining trees. I suspect it will be 1 ½ week delay before broadband. I've installed the new WiFi PCI cards and drivers Thursday, but the router detection software requires a modem connected to the router via patch cable. Delays! Delays! Delays!

Randy wouldn't answer his phone today. I downloaded 260 MB of DJ Sasha and Paul Oakenford mp3s over Kazaa so my day wasn't completely wasted.

That's all folks.

Classical MP3 Play list | Bought Zen Touch online | bought Gradius III/IV | PSP's white in Europe (2005-08-11 19:11)

Today, I was playing with my Creative Lab's Zen Touch 20 GB HDD. I have an Archos Jukebox 20 with my favorite MP3s loaded totaling 9 GB. Now, I'm doubling my capacity with a Zen Touch. I have very low requirements...it must play MP3s and have very good battery life. iPod has these too, but Zen Touch has equal if not more battery life since it runs on a lithium ion battery. I am also trading weight for battery life which is wise in my opinion. Zen Touch will read Winamp PLS files adding to its value.

My WiFi router as you can see acts as regular ground based router too. CAT5e baby! No longer making fun of WiFi routers any more, right? It has extra female ports for any emergency. Say you hit a dead spot? I can't test it unless there is a modem connected....that's lame!

Sleek aint it? Affordable too.

I just acquired the "annihilator" in Metroid Prime 2 where dual parallel dimensions exist. The evil/dark dimension is where your weapons found in the light dimension don't work well against evil/dark dimension enemies. I am following a FAQ at 60 % completion around where the Watch Station is at. Metroid Prime for Gamecube was my first Metroid game.

According to internet headlines, Playstation Portable's European launch date is September 1st. The best game for PSP is also one I own, Wipeout Pure. European PSPs are white instead of black. Nintendo is making a profit instead of Sony because of their cleverness with not providing cutting edge technology in a handheld, but making it very economical. I haven't played a GBA game since early July. Dual Screen hasn't been as promising in software as GameBoy Advance, but the point being Dual Screen is good for that. I'm not a big Dual Screen supporter. I'm a huge Xbox and Playstation 2 and shrug the fact of paying for games I already own on Super Nintendo because it's wasted money paying for it twice.

Today, I drove into town and walked into the local game store to buy either Super Mario World on GBA or Breath of Fire 4 on PS1. The guy there knows me so I said, "hello." Neither one was available so I ended up buying Gradius III and IV for PS2. Gradius III was a Super Nintendo game and Gradius IV was an arcade game. I read in an online review quoting "Gradius III has brilliant color." I'll never know the answer to why I buy old games.....I just do. Gradius III was popular in the 91. The PS2 port has one advantage....fluent 60 frames per second graphics from beginning to end. I just haven't played this yet that's all. Tomorrow morning I'm playing Gradius III at least once

Games to add to the list:

Gradius IV & V (2000 Konami)

Here is my classical music collection. Do you believe I even have it? And no I don't listen to it often! I don't plan to get anymore mp3s of classical origin. My favorite song is Night on Bald Mountain. Sounds powerful in a odd way.

"BREAKING NEWS"

-Energy and Asset Technology, Inc. (EGTY) owns a global license to market the genetically enhanced Global Cedar growth trees, with plans to REVOLUTIONIZE the forest-timber industry.

These newly enhanced Global Cedar trees require only 9-12 years of growth before they can be harvested for lumber, whereas worldwide growth time for lumber is 30-50 years.

Other than growing at an astonishing rate, the Global Cedar has a number of other benefits.

Its natural elements make it resistant to termites, and the lack of oils and sap found in the wood make it resistant to forest fire, ensuring higher returns on investments.

The wood is very lightweight and strong, lighter than Poplar and over twice as strong as Balsa, which makes it great for construction. It also has the unique ability to regrow itself from the stump, minimizing the land and time to replant and develop new root systems.

Based on current resources and agreements, EGTY projects revenues of $140 Million with an approximate profit margin of 40 % for each 9-year cycle. With anticipated growth, EGTY is expected to challenge Deltic Timber Corp. during its initial 9-year cycle.

Deltic Timber Corp. currently trades at over $38.00 a share with about $153 Million in revenues.

As the reputation and demand for the Global Cedar tree continues to grow around the world

EGTY believes additional multi-million dollar agreements will be forthcoming. The Global Cedar nursery has produced about 100,000 infant plants and is developing a production growth target of 250,000 infant plants per month.

Energy and Asset Technology is currently in negotiations with land and business owners in New Zealand, Greece and Malaysia regarding the purchase of their popular and profitable fast growing infant tree plants.

Inquiries from the governments of Brazil and Ecuador are also being evaluated.

Time Freedom Fighter (2006-12-24 09:38:00)

wills trusts You never know when some thing can happen to you in this world to change everything in your life, so it's best to be prepared by having a will. A legal can be drafted by any person at the age of 18; the will can be drafted without an aid of an attorney.

Time Freedom Fighter (2006-12-28 20:17:00)

bob wills Writing a will may be the furthest thought from your mind, but it is one of the most important documents you will ever create. Most people facing terminal illness want to secure dignity comfort control and a chance to leave. You will probably want your precious wealth to be inherited by your chosen relatives and friends, so wills are very important in this matter.

Dungeon Siege 2 | emulated Atari ST | 85% done with Metriod Prime 2 Echoes (2005-08-16 20:11)

Dungeon Siege 2 is coming out tomorrow locally. I've had played the prequel in 2002 and made it too the end. It's a MMORPG as well as single player RPG. It has slightly better graphics than Dungeon Siege, but same old click on monster deal making the character do all the work. From what I learned...the other characters in your party mimic you better than before. IGN gives it 8.0 out of 10. Graphics were 8.0.

Randy didn't answer his phone on Saturday or Sunday so I was trolling PS3 forums instead. College starts next week and my time doing these things will be minimal.

So I cut open the shipping box and packaging plastic of the mp3 player. Handled the Zen Touch in my right hand and noticeably lighter than my Archos Jukebox 20. Before I could try this new portable player out, I had to go to my technical college to get books. I drove there /w 2 thumb drives in my pocket. Walked in the front door and a college girl asked for raffle tickets for some college football game. So I said "no thanks babe" and scuttled my way to the book store. Before looking around I bumped into some young adults who left immediately. Two minutes later I found out the required textbooks were the same as last year so all I did was waste gas! Went back home to play with my new gadget, uploaded the required M $ Windows driver and added my electronica and country to the gadget. I won't add all the music to it.

Damn, I've gotten so far in Metroid Prime 2 Echoes, but I hadn't scan enough dead marines or metroids to proceed to the next area. I'm angry. I saw Metriod Prime (AKA Dark Samus) for the first time in this game cause I didn't play Metriod 2 Samus's Return.

To kill time I was emulating the TOS 2.06 operating system via Steem Engine. The program can run full screen too. I alt tab so I can get the cursor to the Windows desktop instead of inside the program so I can maximize the window. Games only required 1 MB at 10 MHz....not much. Remember, Atari released it in the mid-80s. I got Pacman to work on it.

Downloaded another emulator called Project Tempest made to emulate Tempest 2000 on PC and it works perfectly if you don't mind playing it with a keyboard. Jaguars are $150. I'm not paying for one so I was more interested emulating Tempest 2000. The usefulness hasn't changed that much since Windows 3.1 except for broadband Ethernet and playing 3D games.

This is Ian signing off. I'm very tired.

Steel Battalion owned! | Bought TI-89 Titanium (2005-08-19 16:01)

. Yesterday, I drove to Game Stop /w my new Zen Touch cycling playlists for me so I could keep my eye on the road. Interstates can be dangerous cause everyone is doing 80 MPH. Seriously. The Minnesotan county sheriffs aren't pulling drivers over not. I didn't see a cop by me. I didn't know quite what to buy I bought Steel Battalion for $120. It takes 5 minutes to set up and 3 minutes to put away. This is the same game Gamespy gave the score saying this is single best peripheral any 3rd party had ever released in video game history! The problem is not the controller, but where to store it because it has 40 switches and buttons. Sammy USA (Japanese arcade manufacture's North American branch) makes the toughest controller. Steel Battalion costs $200 new and it's still popular after 3 years. So I first was looking for a place to store this bulky hardware in the corner wall.

Look at the huge arcade stick!

Steel Ballition is anything but cheap. In the simulator you learn by dieing. Game Spy had it right. Graphics are 9.0 out of 10. Using the stick must be 9.5 out of 10. In Steel Battalion your government is at war. B52s bomb the VT (Virtual Tank) hanger. Now begins the VT start up sequence. There is a button on the arcade stick to close the pilot department, one to start it, one button to start the ignition and you've got a heads up display that takes up half the screen.

The TI89 Titanium and TI83 Plus side by side. They play Calculator games too.

TI89's OS screen.

$160 to do addition. Look ma, my calculator is on steroids!

While in the city I also spent money on a Texas Instruments 89 Titanium. It has a Motorola 68000 CPU. Not the low end TI83's Z80. I remember this cause Sega Genesis ran a Motorola 68000 to power it. So my calculator is just as powerful as a Sega Genesis. The TI83 didn't have a GUI at start up. I was running OS 1.14 on my TI83 and upgraded it to OS v1.18. Then the TI-89 had OS v3.01 so I've backuped the programs installed on it via TI Connect (Win32 software) installed OS v3.1 and installed the retail software again. You can run games on these things. Texas Instruments makes the best calculators in the world. These last a few decades. Possibly the only reason a TI calc would stop working is if you have battery acid in the battery department or dropped it off a three story building! My dad reimbursed me $90 for the TI-89.

Broadband? What for? (2005-08-24 19:39)

Sorry about the lack of updates. Tuesday was the first day doing CCNA Cisco over again. Cisco is going to be hell the rest of the year. I am going to fail all my tests. Everyone there doesn't know me or seen me, but some of them like video games (first person shooters and MMORPGs) though I am suppose to learn Cisco terminology instead.

I read pass 3rd chapter without getting frustrated easily. I didn't expect any of the old people in the last class to be here this year. Some of them are smarter at it. I know all of them won't admit they're better. LOL! I suck apparently at this networking, but continue because I suck worse at CAD (computer animation). Usually I don't have bandwidth to spare so I downloaded Nero Burning ROM 6.6.16 at school onto a thumb drive. WITC has a T3 backbone line, but it's shared by 50 computers and not one. Downloads software a lot faster with no bandwidth cap.

Programs installed on HDD

Abiword 2.2.9; Nero Burning Rom 6.6.16; 7Zip 0.46; Open Office.org 1.9.118, Imesh 5.0, Opera Browser 8.02; Mozilla Firefox 1.0.6; Maxthon 1.3.3; WinRAR 3.5; Photo-Brush 3.5; IM2 2.0; Paint Shop Pro 9.1; Video LAN 0.82; Skype 1.3.0.6; Shareaza 1.4, Quintessential Media Player 110 beta; The Gimp 2.8, Kazaa Lite Revolution, Visual Basic 2K3, MS-Office 2K3

I went over to my uncle's house to see the KA-BAND modem I'll have Friday. The modem is connected via RJ-45 to his garage where it's hooked up to the KA-BAND satellite. From the modem to his PC is a bus topology. My hope is once the modem is hooked up to the router everything will magically work. I'm doing the LAN for my parents who are relying on me.

When broadband is available what will I use it for?

1. First thing I will do is download Genesis ROMs for my PS2 Ranges from 2 MB – 5 MB which can take several hours over dialup
2. Download a Linux ISO
3. add all my videogames to GameSpot game collection
4. Get more music than usual.
5. stream in internet radio
6. Test and see if Diablo 2 battlenet is any faster /w it. This is satellite internet we're talking about.
7. Seeing if Guild Wars plays online any faster over it
8. Download a lot of abandonware games.

Life isn't fun no more. Randy nor Bob talk to me anymore and must look out for new friends. It must be because I am turning more into something they aren't such as computer nerd doing CNA. We've been best friends since middle school, but now they've shot me in the foot or alienating me by keeping the silence between us. Alrighty then! My job coach going well for the most part. She likes American Country and 1960s rock such as the Rolling Stones, but not the heavy metal like Black Sabbath. She dislikes electronica a lot. The cause in effect was getting a job in the computer field. I need a CCNA certificate to get a job. She wants to bypass CCNA authorization so I can get a computer job not normally applicable because it's what the American Dream is. Having someone unusually dedicated to getting a job in the field is awesome. I had a job at the gas station and I simply didn't have the determination to work half time any more so I dropped out. I was told I wasn't good enough to be a clerk making me mad. It's a small village gas station.

Five days ago I quit Catharton Electronica, but rejoined 48 hrs later without getting back on top. No body in Europe likes pickups. They all think those things are ugly. I tried to have a pickup rating post and some one was flaming at me. I expected to get some conflicts when joining. So I flame back at him. I wasn't banned.

Windows Vista is the next generation Windows formally called Windows Longhorn. The first beta (not alpha) screenshots of Windows Vista are online and it looks like Windows XP with transparent title bars. The official windows font is still Sans Serif and I almost thought it was Arial. In fact it still can if you choose to change the title and menu bar font to Arial. Internet Explorer 7 will be a tabbed browser and as always stays the same for another couple years. Service Packs are making a return. I went into MSconfig and unchecked those annoying Windows Update in the taskbar. I think IE7 is generic because it shows the web pages just as well as IE6 or Mozilla Firefox. I'm sure it is patched and the stability is increased. It runs the WinFS file system further decreasing cluster size on the HDD. Worldwide launch is 2007. Vista probably won't come with any new programs that WinXP doesn't already have and some of the simple programs like Calc and Notepad will be ported as they are without changes. The default Windows theme is code-named Aero Glass much like Linux themes are named. Windows Vista will have animated thumbnail animations like animated GIFs for video files and animated GIFs. Windows XP had animation for AGIFs and the first frame for video. New Technologies

Fundamentals: new developments to the basic structure of the operating system including the .NET framework, a new audio framework, further support for digital rights management (DRM), an application deployment engine ("Click-Once"), improvements to the installation of applications (Windows Installer/MSI 4.0), and the controversial Trustworthy Computing initiative previously known as Palladium (see also trusted computing).

Windows Presentation Foundation or WPF, formerly code named Avalon: a new user interface subsystem and API based on XML, .NET, and vector graphics, which will make use of 3D computer graphics hardware and Direct3D technologies. See Windows Graphics Foundation.

Windows Communication Foundation or WCF, formerly code named Indigo: a service-oriented messaging system to allow programs to interoperate locally or remotely similar to web services.

WinFX (not to be confused with "WinFS"): a new API to allow access to these new features.

My former username had this many posts. Then I deleted my account because no one cared what i said anymore. I'm not dumb. I felt guilty not being able to post on a good board so I registered again! Now I have about 47 posts.

Hi there this is kinda of off topic but I was wanting to know if blogs use WYSIWYG editors or if you have to manually code with HTML. I'm starting a blog soon but have no coding skills so I wanted to get guidance from someone with experience. Any help would be greatly appreciated! Also visit my website: roll up banner stands

Satellite Internet at last (2005-08-28 13:56)

Thursday, I set up the wired Ethernet for 3 computers in my room. The custom PC has problems shutting down without warning before the motherboard goes beep. This happens 10 minutes after a cold boot. I thought it was a bad DIMM so I started pulling out DIMMs starting with the right one. Then I turned the PC back on until it shut itself off again so I could pull out the next.

Friday was an awkward. I was so excited I drank not two, but five 8 ounce Mt. Dew cans! That's when I get really excited. The satellite installers were your new bunch new to installing it. The signal got received. The SAT is not an IEEE standard unlike WiMax ...it's once used in NASA satellites! Go Figure! Wild Blue uses Ka-BAND for sending TCP/IP data into space. Wild Blue satellites use IPv6. Thus far bandwidth goes 350KB/sec depending on the host server. Its dual linked to do upload and download. My parents don't use UHF or VHF anymore so the tripod for the TV antenna was used for the satellite while the old TV antenna is off the roof. It took two specialists six hours to complete the installation. Their problem was finding a good place to drill a hole into the house so they found a place under the deck into our basement which later was filled with compressed sealant.

Modem Dimensions 10x8x1.5 inches

I've had to drive into Hudson to get some extra RJ-45 because the modem was on the opposite side of the router. I went to my favorite forum and that has a 2 or 3 second latency between pages although downloading speeds and streaming audio/video is as quick as 1.5 Mbit DSL. The wireless network is level 2 on the porch/deck that runs at 11 - 18 Mbits. In my room the wireless network is at 94 % strength.

The satellite downloaded Knoppix 3.9 (696 MB ISO) in 54 minutes! This would've taken days over dial up. I'll burn it to a CD and give it to the Linux teacher who Knoppix 3.9 GUI which is faster than Knoppix 3.6.3 GUI. There aren't any new programs in this version, but detects the NIC so I use the internet (knowing it isn't limited to web browser or instant messenger.) It has KDE version 3.6. Upgrading my Windows video drivers made running 2D applications much smoother. I am using my WiFi router as a CAT5e router networking 4 computers

I've already downloaded

- Knoppix 3.9
- ATI driver
- Nvidia Driver
- JAVA 2.1
- upgraded WIFI router firmware
- 30 MB of Genesis Roms
- streamed Digitally Imported at 96 kbps.
- MP3s from Kazaa (not streamed though)

Things I haven't tried

- play online game with it.
- VoIP
- VPN
- Webcam

Dad went to Best Buy to buy a LinkSys wireless laptop NIC ($30). It was as easy as installing the driver, rebooting the operating system, and double clicking on the router's signal on the desktop. Someone can surf the internet from the lawn. My wireless network is not encrypted nor has a password, but it won't be tapped into by outsiders. Our deck gets 1 or 2 bars or 11 Mbits to 24 Mbits. My room gets all 108 Mbits.

I also downloaded Sega Genesis ROMs for emulation on my PS2. Meanwhile, I updated my firmware in my router from ver. 1.1 to ver. 2.5 so its firewall is improved. I have Warsong, Madden Football 95, Langrisser 2, Langrisser 3, Vectorman, Vectorman 2, Romance of the Three Kingdoms III, but now I need Castlevania III.

I found Lode Runner: The Legend Returns as abandon ware at Home of the Underdogs yesterday. It's a complete game coming with 150 levels. I've played this on my 100 MHz Pentium pc which came free. Out of these I got to level 35. The computer didn't have a CDR and obviously USB Thumb drives didn't exist. Unfortunately when we got rid of that computer Lode Runner got deleted. The graphics are obsolete, but that's not what made it fun. It was very challenging and uses only 5 keyboard buttons. The sequel is also abandon ware called Lode Runner: The Mad Monks Revenge. It's supposed to be the same as Lode Runner The Legend Returns, but features 100 additional new levels. Randy came over Saturday so I showed him my satellite collection and went to holylemon.com to watch video including the Streaker kick and Jet Go Cart videos. We each won matches in Winning Eleven Soccer 7 on PS2 resulting with 1-0 and 0-1. We had too much fun playing it. He drove me to Game Stop in Woodbury so I could look around. On our way over there we listened to one techno song (Way of the Sword) and the rest of the time we listened to American country songs which didn't bother me. I normally listen to country songs even if I list the trance songs. I walked around Game Stop and bought Crimson Sea 2 used. I own Crimson Sea for Xbox. I was afraid of spending money in case I found something unique later like Grandia.

Randy said I was grouchy at 9 PM right before he went home. Randy was talking about fishing and hunting in Canada and about black bears killing dogs and that you need a sidearm up there. Then I showed him the tree clearing dad made and where he stacked it. Finally, I've asked my parents to drive me to the Minnesota State Fair (runs till Labor Day) so I invited Randy so we can eat stuff.

Today, I've bought Grandia (Game Arts RPG) at Toyriffic in River Falls costing $34. The case is in so/so shape, but the manual and CDs are in great shape. The reason why it's rare is gamers often keep it some think it's a PS1 gem. Grandia is well designed and plays like a SNES RPG. I almost missed it. Once exclusive for Sega Saturn the Playstation version is the only version to come to USA. It's like a SNES RPG with new features. GameSpot reviewed soundtracks and game play perfect. It shall have been a good purchase. Games to add to list

1. Grandia (2000 Game Arts)
2. Crimson Sea 2 (2004 Koei)
3. Rayman 2 (2000 Urisoft)

Hi Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site. Great blog, particularly this thing about Satellite Internet at last. I'm working on some similar projects myself. You have some good ideas but unfortunately I'm struggling to get started. I've got an interest in the new live 8 dvd set but ultimately I want to do something more personal. Anyway, keep up the good work, I'll drop by again for another visit soon. Bye.

So I've been searching around looking at blogs because I want to start one at my site (golf schools). But I'm not sure how I want to go.... blogger, wordpress, drupal... not sure, and I don't know that much about them. I like the look of this site. If you have time could you email me what you like/dislike about your blog? Thank you if you decide to take the time to help me out, and I understand if you don't. Ultimately I want it to look good with being "hands off" as much as possible. Anyway, keep up the good work.

Knoppix 3.9 review + Download (2005-09-05 13:40)

Knoppix PC specs

Athlon XP at 1.8 GHz

386 MB of SDRAM

40 GB HDD

10x DVD-ROM

Floppy

Logitech USB mouse

Standard USB keyboard

Download Knoppix (710 MB ISO)

Knoppix will do everything you want Windows to do. People who use Internet and office suites might want to look at Knoppix. Knoppix has the most applications seen on CD ever. On load up the 2.6.x kernel loads the necessary drivers for you. This is called the boot up sequence. There are error messages, but the OS boots up anyways. This Linux doesn't make a swap file on your HDD, but with decent PCs you really don't need one. Knoppix 3.9 so far is the last Knoppix CD ISO available. Knoppix 4.0 and later started using a DVD and download was 3.5 GB. My satellite connection times out before I can get all of that data on my PC. I run Linux on a slow DVD-ROM so yours is probably faster. It runs KDE Desktop 3.4.0 which is pretty new considering the latest version is 3.4.2.

The default desktop wallpaper of an astronaut and the Earth in the background. The bad thing about Knoppix is it's resolution is 1280x960 which is still better than the first Knoppix Knoppix has been stable since ver. 3.4 making v3.9 even more stable.

For compressing files Knoppix 3.9 has a right click menu with options to save to ZIP or TAR formats. USB thumb drives or USB HDD show up on the Desktop instantly unlike Knoppix 3.6 where I had to manually mount it myself. That's an improvement.

The terminal responds much like Redhat Linux 8.0. Redhat 9.0 was the last Personal Linux distribution under Redhat who know makes Linux for servers. Knoppix 3.9 is two years newer than Redhat 9 and three years newer than Redhat 8.0. The performance issues you'll find with latest Linux will not be in Redhat no more.

Firefox loads web pages as fast as Firefox in Windows XP. MS Office 2003 is better than any Openoffice, but Openoffice would do everything a office suite should do. I downloaded OOo 2.0 beta 2 at noon today. I wrote this blog entry in Knoppix using OOo.

However I've been having trouble getting access to my Hard drive. It could just be that computer that is running Knoppix. I got around this by adding it to my email so I could edit it on Windows.

By default it doesn't make the HDD writable which I guess prevents data saved on the Windows XP file system, NTFS. That can be solved by mounting the HDD

It's free and 696 MB what do you got to loose? It doesn't even mess around with your Windows file system unless you want to save something on your HDD using the desktop HDD1 drive.

Where's my Buddy | bought Radiata Stories & Shin Megami Tensei Nocturne (2005-09-10 14:41)

Firstly, I didn't go to the Minnesota State Fair and that bothered me. I wanted to see the horses, the cows, the farm machinery (which I don't get a change to see up close cause I would be trespassing on farmers land, plus I see it in the fields. John Deere is my favorite tractor brand with John Deere green. JD stopped making personal lawn tractors 5 years ago. Expensive brand of tractor for sure. International Farm Machinery co. is the top underdog these days. International makes anything from school buses to big rigs to lawn mowers.

Secondly, I got enough courage to pull out my once $250 PSP and play Ridge Racer on it. If you hate expensive hardware collecting dust like I do than you'll also feel strange playing it again.

I had to shovel dirt to fill the erosion by our really long driveway. I hate doing hard labor. Nerds like me doing dirty stuff but I was a good son and completed my part however. Then I watched Solaris on AMC. I stayed up all night listening Digitally Imported and post on that same gaming forum,

Then I feel like it's going to be this generation all over again. I start out small with one console for a year than buy another console a year later and buy most of the $20 games. Been gaming for 8 years.

Twelve years ago at my cousin's house the first videogame console we've played was Sega Genesis with Sonic trilogy and RiStar. I loved RiStar.....unbelievably clean and very colorful game. He didn't care about the current consoles out. I went to his house once a month. My cousin is in the Navy now.....a world apart. Haven't seen him for nearly 2 years. We all grow up and no longer see each other.

Great news! I drank my first (cheap) beer in years yesterday. It was a Budweiser Lite. A little mild for my taste, but it can't be all that bad being the largest brewer in the USA. That was great. I can't find my parents' beer and will have to ask my dad to buy more, but he won't. I doubt you can get drunk off Budweiser quickly cause it has as much alcohol as hard lemonade.

Wonders what my 21st birthday will be like? How many uncles will buy a 12 pack of Bud as a birthday present? Maybe all of them.

Then I listened to Digitally Imported via Winamp and work on Visual Basic meanwhile. I got high speed Internet and already downloaded a lot of shit including every single NES, SNES, and Genesis ROM I could think of that I wanted and burnt it on one DVD for storage. That way I don't have to take up bandwidth downloading stuff.

I've been downloading a lot of abandonware lately including the Ultimas and the Might and Magics that came in RAR archives. I had to give the DOS program some conventional memory and a gig of extended memory. These games look so pixilated that it wouldn't keep my interest. Probably why these games are abandoned. Origin (developer of Ultima) closed its doors last year. To see all my abandonware...look at the long videogame list on Ian's Smashing Good Blog.

I did go to the videogame store and picked up a used copy of Atlus's Shin Megami Tensei Nocturne for $40 and Square-Enix's newest RPG, Radiata Stories for $50. My wallet is now empty. RPGs have a strange effect on me somehow. I can't figure it out though. I don't stay genre specific neither.

Randy won't do something with me today! I drove over to see Bob in Baldwin, WI finding out he quit his job two Fridays ago. His phone number is also dead and he won't answer his instant messenger. Wonders what I did to deserve this? I doubt his computer is problematic. There was no way to contact him so I stopped trying. Why should he visit me just so I feel good and not both of us? Something tells me he visits me because I want him too and he suddenly stopped caring.

Games to add to my collection

- Shin Megami Tensei Nocturne (2004 Atlus)
- Radiata Stories (2005 Tri-Ace)
- Nintendogs - Lab and Friends (2005 Nintendo)
- Phantom Dust (2004 Microsoft)

Nintendo Controller unclassified and it's a remote and analog expansion! (2005-09-15 01:13)

Today I am quitting Cisco and Visual Basic so I can go to another college and get educational help. I know that every college job I'm getting into is pain in the ass I am use too. There is general education at the University of Wisconsin River Falls I'm look at though. I'll put on a happy face and act well. There'll be a lot of goober type people there I bet. I've been working here in high school for hands on experience. I'm scared of college. There is also Century College in Minnesota which got good reviews by students who go there and make a career out of themselves. You never know what you're going to get into. Personally, I thought I did once, but now I'm frustrated. I should still walk amongst people who are good at network technician stuff.

My Desktop

With the biggest gaming headline this month happening when Satoru Iwata (Pres. of Nintendo) starting off the Tokyo Game Show by making a hour long speech showing the secretive Revolution controller at 8 PM tonight Wisconsin time! I have to be awake so it can be my next entry! I wish Nintendo would've made a controller that glows in the dark, but these lights would drain batteries in the controller (Nintendo loves longest battery life yea know). And remember after tonight Nintendo will never be the same! It's the turning point in Nintendo history and therefore the final evolution of Nintendo. Let's see if Nintendo has courage to show any of its software they were working on for the last 2 yrs or longer.

Go to IGN CUBE or Tokyo Game Show to see the new controller tonight.

No one knows....not even me. Hopefully Nintendo's got some talented people behind the controller. The only thing that Nintendo has against it is the Gamecube controller looks something Fisher Price would think of. Seriously.

X

Newest Winamp skin....it's an old skin.

The GCN controller looked nothing like the N64 controller so I seriously doubt Nintendo's new controller will look anything like the GCN controller. I doubt it'll even have a C-stick. Someone can't play a game with less buttons than the GCN controller for sure.

The gamecube controller plugs into the side of Revolution! That's so Nintendo can invent something off the wall while keeping the gcN functions unchanged. If Nintendo changed the way gcN games were played it might alienate casual gamers. The controller port will give Nintendo an excuse to keep manufacturing GCN controllers.

Evolution stages of Nintendo

- First evolution – Nintendo started out as a card company in the 19th century
- Second Evolution – Nintendo changed the company towards entertainment and makes Donkey Kong and Mario Bros on many platforms including Commodore and Atari 2600. Then it launches it's first console and got the world's attention.
- Third Evolution – Nintendo launched the 16-bit successor to NES
- Forth Evolution – Nintendo invented the analog stick for all consoles and went polygonal 3D
- Fifth Evolution – Nintendo goes high resolution and uses mini-DVDs
- Final Evolution – Nintendo creates state-of-the-art controller, believes graphics have reached a theoretical limit by not going high def gfx. Believes the future lies in the casual gamer market by kickin Revolution off with loads of mature and teen rated games. Normally licenses its popular franchises to 3rd party developers.

Funny that Nintendo is making marginal profit on Gamecube, GBA, and NDS while Sony and Microsoft are losing millions manufacturing their consoles and PSP and selling them at a lost in order to make profits in the very end. I don't care, but that's all you hear on gaming forums now-a-days along with more buttons are better. By request here's the most powerful.

Short answer

- 1.) PS3 Entertainment System
- 2.) Xbox 360 Entertainment System
- 3.) Revolution Entertainment System

Long answer

1. PS3 has the Cell CPU 3.2 GHz, the RSX GPU (slightly slower than Geforce 7800) and 512MB of shared GDRAM3.
2. Xbox 360 has 64-bit PowerPC CPU with 4 cores each clocking at 3.2 GHz, a GPU similar to Radeon 9600 model and shared 512 MB of GDRAM3
3. Revolution is less powerful than X360.

I'm dreaming about owning an Xbox 360 in November purchasing some software for it as fast as now. The good games for it are Elder Scrolls IV Oblivion and Quake IV. ESIV is a RPG that shows off the hardware. Quake IV is a multiplayer first person shooter which should be in everyone's collection. I want those two. The shooter Gears of War I'm unsure of. The racing videogame of choice is Project Gotham Racing 3 made by Bizarre Creations. That's also the only good one at launch. Xbox 360 launch is November 25, 2005. I will review it once I own it.

THEREVEALINGOFTHENINTENDOREVOLUTIONCONTROLLER

[September 16 at 1:50 AM] I was sleeping when this was being done.

Shigeru Miyamoto (original Mario and Luigi designer) revealed the Bluetooth (IEEE 802.15.1) controller to the world tonight. Bluetooth 2.0 technology will transmit data at 2.1 Mbits/second at 2.45 GHz. The wireless controller contains a gyroscope within it allowing you to tilt the controller side to side or forward and backwards to simulate analog stick movement and can be held vertically or horizontally without the expansion. I was right it about it having less buttons. You can not play Gamecube games with this thing. The Revolution controller doesn't look anything like the Gamecube controller. There was photoshop art on the gaming forums that showed NES-like controllers.

The Revolution controller has an expansion port on the bottom so that an analog stick device can be used with the left hand while holding the Revolution controller vertically.. I was hoping Nintendo would have an analog stick because the Xbox 360 and PS3 use them. Nintendo made it clear that four of these can be connected via Bluetooth. Good thing the rumor was wrong about touch screens on Revolution's controller. Why would I be touching stuff on the controller I won't be seeing on TV?

Excellent Photoshop analog controller example

Nintendo recently commented in a press statement that the controller expansion port could be compatible with conventional analog controllers and that wired 3rd party analog controllers will be plugged into the GCN controller ports on the Revolution

Nintendo used Super Mario Sunshine and Metroid Prime 2 Echoes as game demos to show the controller in action. And this close to launch Nintendo refused to show any next generation games.

The Revolution system has Gamecube controller ports with the ability to play GCN games coping Sony's function playing PS1 software on PS2. Nintendo had backwards compatibly on their Dual Screen and Gameboy Advance handhelds so why not Revolution too?

The Revolution emulates NES, Super NES and N64 games by hardware acceleration. I can see how you can play NES games on Revolution via it's Bluetooth controller by simply turning it horizontally.

Bought Lunar 2 Eternal Blue Complete for PSX (2005-09-22 10:02)

Today, I've been playing Madden Football 2002 on my PS2. I scored five touchdowns for the Vikings against Green Bay with the score ending 35 – 27. That was a tough game. I had to use all my time outs in the last 30 seconds to get Randy Moss (line receiver) to catch the touch down pass. The game was satisfying with nothing to do. It's football season you know. John Madden is as classic with his so/so acting the same lines over and over. I don't believe that Madden 2004 could possibly be much improvement over Madden NFL 2002. The other PS2 football game is ESPN NFL 2K5 which is the last football game Visual Concepts will ever make since EA decided buy a 1 deal license in football.

I'm going to get a tour in Century College on Monday. That's where I'm getting a computer diploma in and everyone works for Geek Squad at Best Buy. Geek Squad costs a fortune to have them come over to your house from what I've had heard. Everyone needs a diploma . I can start with 1 or 2 classes.

I found some Xbox 360 face plates. I believe that the best one is the wood model. MS probably got that from the Atari 2600. These were used for displaying consoles.

We were talking about how Europeans are getting really bad prices on their systems. It's 20 % more than ours.

That's why I have more videogames period. I paid less for them.

Yesterday I went to Toyriffic while looking around and bought Project Snowblind for $20. Lunar Eternal Blue Complete was in an encased cabinet for $69 so I bought that too. Lunar 2 came out 12 yrs ago on the Sega CD. That makes 42 PS games, 90 PS2 games, and 62 Xbox games.

After I play Rayman 2 Revolution the best platform game starring Rayman as of yet (very colorful and showed off the hardware) because the Dreamcast version of Rayman 2 looked and felt great. I'll take a look what Lunar 2 looks like.

Point of View of Nintendo Revolution

I know I'm biased about this and I won't be when editing pages. Nintendo makes childish games except for the mature games. The controller sucks on Gamecube, but Nintendo fans often are ecstatic about Revolution /w the remote NES controller. I haven't seen the games yet. No one has.

Some see Nintendo trying to pattern the most successful strategy used by the music industry against illegal music downloads. Since computers have been powerful enough to emulate past-generation home consoles and the Internet provided an easy, fast, and widely accessible distribution path for ROM images. The music industry's most successful method of reducing illegal music downloading has apparently been to offer consumers a way to download music legally for a small cost. If Nintendo is successful at utilizing this model, they may be able to reduce illegal ROM downloading and open up a new revenue stream.

. Yuji Naka, the designer of Sonic the Hedgehog at Sega, said in an interview with Famitsu, "It's also great that we'll be able to play Famicom (NES) and other games via download. I hope Sega games will be playable as well."

Nintendo's new system fully supports Non uniform rational B-spline used in CAD. It's better than polygons because NURBS do more shadowing and colorization while using the same tech spec hardware.

Point of View of Playstation 3

Awesome. I love the more than simple PS3 controller. It's expensive though. So far PS3 is coming out in March. It has that same dual shock controller that I am comfortable with.

The estimated cost of producing a PS3 is US $483. The Cell microprocessor, the RSX Graphics processing unit, and the BD-ROM disc feeding drive cost $101. The report also notes that Microsoft may plan to disrupt the normal console business cycle by choosing to cut the price of the Xbox 360 at the same time the PS3 launches and supports 7 USB controllers.

PlayStation 3's hard disk drives will be preinstalled with the latest version of Linux, a free operating system.

Sony's 3rd console will be fully compatible with PlayStation 2 and PlayStation games without emulation.

Point of Xbox 360

Has potential. Xbox 360 has more anticipation than Revolution in the US for sure. High definition graphics and Halo 3 have to do with it. Halo 3 won't come out until PS3 is launched. I am thinking about owning one in early December.

If Microsoft chooses to add HD-DVD it could make the Xbox 360 a more competitive multimedia device from a marketing perspective. Since HD DVD would not be standard across all models of the Xbox 360.

The Xbox 360 has the ability to support four Bluetooth controllers. The controller for the It is an improved version of the Type-S controller packaged with Xbox. MS says the controller works 25 hrs w/o being recharged.

Point of View of Playstation Portable

Without a touch screen it can't exceed to popularity of Dual Screen. The JPEG viewer, MP3 decoder shouldn't be in the conclusion why biased PSP owners say PSP is better. The bad battery life is shooting Sony in the foot. The UMD drive is sucking up tons of battery although that doesn't have to do with functionality and playability.

PSP is doing much better than Wonderspan Color, Game Gear, Game.com, Gizmondo, Neo Geo Pocket put together so I give it 3 cheers. Bo-Yah. PSP is the biggest Nintendo handheld competitor ever on the market.

Sony has stated that the PSP will be able to connect to the forthcoming PlayStation 3 for transfer of game saves and media to and from the PS3's hard drive,

The system's manual states that the PSP is capable of 3 to 6 hours of game play.

You can read my PSP review. It's well written.

Point of View of Nintendo Dual Screen

Trying hard to see why Dual Screen is cool! It does have well designed games. GFX aren't as good as PSP, but there are times any 3D will do. Of course 3D games have been on videogame consoles since Doom came out on Super Nintendo. Nintendo hasn't brought out many 3D games other than Super Mario 64 yet! Nintendo is coming out with Metroid Prime Hunters and Nintendogs is 3D.

Farmer Labor Party (2005-09-25 13:42)

FARMER-LABOR PARTY

ORGANIZATIONAL HISTORY

The first modern Farmer-Labor Party emerged in Minnesota in 1918. Economic dislocation caused by American entry into the war put agricultural prices and workers' wages into imbalance with rapidly escalating retail prices during the war years, and farmers and workers sought to make common cause in the political sphere to redress their grievances. A national Farmer-Labor Party emerged from the national Labor Party founded in Chicago in 1919.

The official organ of the Farmer-Labor Party was a newspaper published in Chicago called The New Majority. Editor of this paper was Robert Buck.

One important gathering that was a precursor to the establishment of a national Farmer-Labor Party was the Cooperative Congress, held in Chicago on Feb. 12, 1920. The gathering included participants from the cooperative movement, farmers organizations, trade unions, and the Plumb Plan League. The congress elected a 12 person All-American Farmer-Labor Cooperative Commission. The event was closely reported in the pages of The Liberator by Robert Minor.

In 1920 the Farmer-Labor Party of the United States ran Parley Parker Christensen for President of the United States. Christensen finished particularly strongly in Washington, netting over 77,000 votes in that state alone. In total, Christensen received over 265,000 votes from voters of the 19 states in which the Farmer-Labor Party was on the ballot.

[fn. Solon DeLeon and Nathan Fine (eds.), The American Labor Year Book, 1929. (NY: Rand School of Social Science, 1929), pg. 144.]

The demise of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party did not mean an end to the Farmer-Labor Party movement, however. The regular Farmer-Labor Party continued to exist at the state level, with state and local organizations in Minnesota, Colorado, Utah, Illinois, Kentucky, Montana, New York, Pennsylvania, Oklahoma, Missouri, Washington, the Dakotas, and elsewhere.

This history is documented below.

APRIL

"A Yankee Convention," by Robert Minor. [April 1920] In this article from the pages of The Liberator, Communist Party leader Robert Minor expresses excitement over the growth of the cooperative movement in America, not so much for that trend's ability to lead to the long-run liberation of the working class, but for its ability to bring together farmers and the urban working class in a common cause. Minor here reports on the Cooperative Congress, a national convention bringing together cooperative operators, farmers' groups, labor unions, and the Plumb Plan League. Although the gathering formally banned the discussion of politics from its proceedings, Minor emphasizes the potential political importance of the cooperative system, particularly as a provisioner of striking workers. Includes several drawings by Minor of key participants of the gathering.

OCTOBER

"Radicalism in Amerca," by Morris Hillquit. [October 15, 1920] This article by Socialist Party NEC member Morris Hillquit in the party's official organ reviews the two new political organizations to emerge in post-war America—the Labor Party (which transformed itself to the Farmer-Labor Party) and the Communist Party. Hillquit states that the Labor Party began from a principled position, seeking fundamental change of capitalist society, but was quick to sacrifice principle for expedience on the campaign trail, destroying its working-class nature through a merger with the "nebulous aggregation of middle-class liberals known as the 'Committee of 48.'" To this amalgam was added the "purely imaginary forces of the farming community," resulting in an eclectic mish-mash slated for quick political extinction. As for the Communist Party, Hillquit stated that while it was "desirable" to have "extreme" groups within the Socialist Party as a counterbalance to "any existing tendencies to opportunism," in the current case the Left Wing's position was not a "legitimate reaction" since the SPA had taken "the most advanced international socialist position" during and after the war. Instead, it was a "quixotic" attempt to duplicate the Bolshevik Revolution in the United States — and effort which had shattered by "endless internecine strife and successive splits" as soon as the negative program of opposition to the SPA leadership was replaced by the positive task of organization building. As a result, neither of the new political groups had made "any essential contribution" to American radicalism. "The Socialist Party still holds the leadership in radical politics in the United States," Hillquit notes.

MAY

"Theses on the United Front of Labor," a confidential document adopted by the Central Executive Committee of the Communist Party of America at its session of May 29, 1922. A fascinating glimpse from the Comintern Archives at the thinking of the governing CEC of the Communist Party with respect to its United Front strategy. The majority of the American proletariat was not conscious of its distinct class interests, the document stated, and could gain awareness—and usefulness to the revolutionary movement —only through its daily struggle over wages, working conditions, etc. These struggles would expose reformist economic and political leaderships as enemies of the working class. While a broad united front might be constructed in the labor field through the amalgamation process, in the political sphere established parties claiming to represent the working class must be eliminated from positions of leadership. Practice would prove the superiority of the Workers Party's tactics, slogans, aims, and leadership and a role of political leadership would consequently follow. The Communists must become a factor in any Labor Party to be formed in America. "We can achieve this end only if we anticipate the formation of such a party and now adopt a policy through which we will become established as a force in the political struggle of the workers..." Any party emerging from the Conference for Progressive Political Action would be retrograde due to its eclectic class composition, however. This organization would dissipate working class power in "election campaigns fought on the basis of petty ameliorative reforms and of schemes for minor changes in the form of capitalist government." Only a federative United Front Labor Party allowing the Workers Party's continued existence "as a distinct organization with a disciplined, educated membership acting upon a program to give leadership to the struggles of the workers," complete with "its full independence, its right of criticism, and its freedom of action" would be acceptable, according to these theses. Primary authorship of this document has been attributed to Max Bedacht.

OCTOBER

"For a Labor Party: Recent Revolutionary Changes in American Politics: A Statement by the Workers Party of America, Oct. 15, 1922," by John Pepper. Full text of a rather long pamphlet published in this first edition by the Workers Party of America without authorship noted—two later editions attributed to the pen of John Pepper. The pamphlet argues that while most previous efforts have met with failure, the success of the Republican Party—originally a Third Party—in establishing itself proved that the Third Party tactic was viable. America as a nation was in the process of becoming ever more centralized and bureaucratized, tendencies favorable to the reshuffling of the political deck. A mass Labor Party was the answer—its long-term survival inexorably linked to actual union participation in the organization. The non-partisan “reward friends and punish enemies” orientation of Gompers’ AF of L was roundly criticized. Regardless of this line of the national trade union bureaucracy, State Federations of Labor around the country were standing up for a Labor Party and a national organization along those lines was in the offing.

NOVEMBER

“The Workers Party and the Labor Party,” by C.E. Ruthenberg. [Nov. 1922] Executive Secretary of the Workers Party of America C.E. Ruthenberg attempts to explain the relationship between the WPA and a forthcoming labor party—an institution which Ruthenberg was being inevitably brought into existence by the development of economic forces. This new party would be extremely positive, he argues, noting that if such a party was established and had “the support of millions of organized workers would be the greatest stride forward in the history of the American working class.” It was the task of the Communists to “stay with the masses in their struggles,” Ruthenberg indicates, and thus to participate fully in the labor party that was coming to be. There would be no liquidation of the Workers Party should any such labor party come about, however, for the educational and agitational role of the party would remain, akin to the role of the Trade Union Educational League in the unions—leading the working class and helping to transform the new party into a Communist party. Ruthenberg offers two slogans to summarize the task: “For a Labor Party!” and “For a stronger, more powerful, better disciplined Workers Party!”

1923

MAY

“Monster Political Convention of the Workers of America, Chicago, July 3, 1923.” Every Local Union, Central Body, Farm Organization, State, National, and International Body and Political Group Invited. A Chance at Last for Bringing About United Action of the Workers of Hand and Brain on the Political Field. [Circa May 1923] Convention call of the Farmer-Labor Party of the United States (J.G. Brown, Secretary) to a July 3, 1923 gathering in Chicago called for the purpose of “devising means for knitting together the many organizations in this country in such a manner as will enable the workers to really function politically.” While established national organizations were already invited, “the National Committee felt the rank and file should also be represented, and it was therefore voted to send credentials to all local and central labor and farm bodies in the United States and urge that delegates be sent to this most important convention.” Local organizations had simply to elect a delegate, have the President and Secretary sign and stamp the form, and return a duplicate slip by mail to the Farmer-Labor Party of the United States in Chicago.

“For a Labor Party: Addenda to the Second Edition, May 15, 1923,” by John Pepper. There were three editions of the pamphlet For a Labor Party produced over the course of 1922-23, the second and third of which added additional commentary reflecting the developing situation. This document collects the vast majority of changed material from the original October 15, 1922, document (available as a separate file). Pepper excoriates the action of the Socialist Party delegates to the December 1922 Cleveland gathering of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, blaming them for the failure of the gathering to launch the Labor Party anxiously sought by rank and file trade unionists and poor farmers. Instead, the gathering chose to temporize, barring the Workers Party from participation, passing a virtually meaningless and watered down middle class platform, and following the AF of L’s line of non-partisan political action (“rewarding friends and punishing enemies”). The decision of the Socialist Party not to aggressively pursue an independent federated Labor Party was an act of premeditated treason against the working class, in Pepper’s view. It was left to the Farmer-Labor Party, which bolted the CPPA following its defeat of a proposal to form a Labor Party, to organize this new federative group and a call for a July 3, 1923, Convention to found a new party had been issued. This July 3 Convention would “represent hundreds of thousands, and will be the first real step to an organization of a mass party of the American working class,” Pepper asserts, adding that “the idea of a Labor Party is advancing, and it can no longer be stopped.”

JULY

“Statement of Principles of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party: A document of the National Convention establishing the FFLP held at Chicago, July 3-5, 1923.” During the 4th of July holiday in 1923 a conference was held in Chicago, conceived in large measure by the Workers Party of America as the vehicle for its united front efforts, which established the “Federated Farmer-Labor Party.” This document is a statement of political principles of this new organization, which united elements of the old state Farmer-Labor Parties with representatives of sundry workers', farmers', and radical political organizations under the de facto direction of the WPA. "Today the government of the United States is a government of, for, and by Wall Street and the financial and industrial system it represents," the document states. As a result "only one road lies open for the industrial workers and farmers to protect themselves against the exploitation and oppression of the financial and industrial lords who rule this country—to organize a political party representing the interests of the industrial workers and farmers and enter into the political arena to wrest control of the government from the hands of the financial and industrial masters who now rule in this country."

"Organization Rules of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party: A document of the National Convention establishing the FFLP held at Chicago, July 3-5, 1923." Constitution of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party approved by the founding convention of the organization. The group was to be directed between conventions by a National Executive Committee based upon proportional representation of affiliated organizations with a designated set-aside of 5 for the old Farmer-Labor Party. This National Executive Committee in turn was to elect a 7 member Executive Council, the National Secretary, and National Chairman of the organization. Dues were to be either on an at large ($1 per year) or per capita affiliation (1 cent per member per month) basis.

AUGUST

"The Farmers in the New Party," by Hal M. Ware. [August 1923] While a great deal of analysis has been lavished upon the relationship between the Communist Party and the trade union movement during the Federated Farmer-Labor Party interlude of 1923-24, little effort has been spent on examining the relationship of the radical farmer movement to the new organization. This short article, written by the leading CP specialist in agricultural affairs of the first years of the 1920s, casts the relationship in a glowing light. Farmers were burdened by staggering debt, Ware says. He states they were ready to forge a coalition in a new political organization dedicated to addressing their specific needs, rather than continued reliance upon "farmer friends" in the legislative branch, with their "miserable patchwork legislation."

"The Federated Farmer-Labor Party," by William Z. Foster. [August 1923] This long day-by-day account of the founding convention of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party (July 3-5, 1923) was written in the immediate aftermath of the gathering by William Z. Foster. This piece, published in the pages of the monthly magazine of the Trade Union Educational League, is gushingly upbeat and positive in its characterization of the founding convention: "Marked by a tremendous outburst of militancy and enthusiasm, it was a vibrant, thrilling, overwhelming demand by the rank and file of agricultural and industrial labor for the formation of a powerful political party of the toilers. Nobody who attended its sessions will ever forget them." While Foster would very soon come to regard the WPA's ideologically blinkered Farmer-Labor Party policy and TUEL's subsequent loss of contacts and influence in the labor movement as the greatest of debacles—fuel for the factional war inside the Workers Party over the next several years—at this precise moment he was positively ebullient about the organization's prospects, it's founding marking a new epoch in American political history: "A mass party, led by militants, embodying the vital idea of a united political organization of workers and farmers, and operating in the midst of the present industrial and agricultural discontent, it is full of dynamic possibilities," Foster declared. Foster dismissed the "supposed [old] Farmer-Labor Party bolt" as a "lie widely spread," and he asserted that "the fact is that the most militant elements in the FLP, carrying with them the bulk of the organization, have declared for the new party."

OCTOBER

"To All Labor Unions in Chicago: A Circular Letter Dated Oct. 31, 1923," by Joseph Manley In the aftermath of the July 3-5, 1923 convention which established the Federated Farmer-Labor Party there was a great deal of acrimony directed at the Workers Party of America for their purported splitting of the farmer-labor movement. This letter to Chicago unions, signed by Joseph Manley (son-in-law of William Z. Foster and National Secretary of the FFLP) answered these charges. The body of this letter is actually a quoted letter stating the position of the Workers Party, signed by the Executive Secretary of that organization, C.E. Ruthenberg. Ruthenberg charges that it was the (old) Farmer-Labor Party of Fitzpatrick and the Chicago Federation which "got cold feet," violated its previous understanding with the Workers Party, refused any further effort at mediation of differences, and which ultimately was ready to "sacrifice the labor party because Gompers threatened them." The Workers Party was not at fault, Ruthenberg stated: "If there was any split at this convention it was not a split caused by the Workers Party. If there was a betrayal, it was not a betrayal by the Workers Party. The split and betrayal were the work of Fitzpatrick and the Farmer-Labor group."

NOVEMBER

"Letter from C.E. Ruthenberg in Chicago to Morris Hillquit in New York, Nov. 3, 1923." A cryptic note sent from the Executive Secretary of the Workers Party of the member to the leading light of the arch-rival Socialist Party of America. Ruthenberg notes that he will be in New York on Nov. 8, 1923, and that he seeks a conference with Hillquit to "talk with you" in regard to an invitation sent by the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party to labor political groups for a Nov. 15 conference in St. Paul. This conference was an attempt to "come to an agreement on the question of calling a national convention for the nomination of a presidential candidate and the adoption of a national platform." Despite the hostility between the two organizations, this document affirms that there was at least informal discussion at the top level about the possibility of joint action with regards to the Farmer-Labor Party movement.

"Letter from C.E. Ruthenberg in Chicago to Osip Piatnitsky in Moscow, Nov. 19, 1923." A lengthy and illuminating review of the Workers Party of America's Farmer-Labor Party strategy as it rapidly evolved in the fall of 1923. Ruthenberg relates the decision of the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party to call a convention at St. Paul in May of 1924 for the purpose of joint nomination of a candidate for President of the United States and adoption of a joint program—thereby uniting the various state Farmer-Labor organizations, the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, and other labor and political groups into a single organization. Upon learning of this initiative, Ruthenberg states that the CEC immediately sent him to Minnesota, where he met for two days with Minnesota FLP officials working out the details for a November 15 pre-convention conference. Interestingly, Ruthenberg states that it was his initiative over "considerable objection" to extend an invitation to the pre-convention conference to Morris Hillquit of the Socialist Party in an effort to bring the SP and its popular cachet into the new united organization. Ruthenberg also related the decision of the CEC to declare a truce in the ranks of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, which was racked by a severe struggle between the union administration of Sidney Hillman and a TUEL-based left opposition. Hillman and the ILGWU were to be key players in the forthcoming Farmer-Labor Party movement, Ruthenberg indicated, while Hillman had the incentive to play the public role of peacemaker, thus consolidating his position in any forthcoming amalgamation of the ILGWU with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, believed by Ruthenberg to be in the offing in the not too distant future. This document demonstrates that volition in WPA action in the Farmer-Labor Party movement came from the party itself—that it did not blindly follow "orders from Moscow" on this matter but rather acted as it saw fit under the general line of the Comintern, providing information of its specific actions after the fact.

"Our Labor Party Policy," by James P. Cannon and William Z. Foster. [Nov. 1923] The split of the Chicago Federation of Labor from the Federated Farmer-Labor Party Conference of July 3-5, 1923, came as a stunning blow to the Communist Party's union-oriented activists—of which Bill Foster and Jim Cannon were in the first rank. That the New York-based Central Executive Committee attempted to spin the July Conference as a great triumph rather than an unmitigated debacle came as an insult to this Chicago-centric cohort. It was this matter that triggered a bitter factional war inside the Communist movement that lasted for the rest of the decade. This internal party document by Cannon and Foster is a salvo against the New York leadership of John Pepper and his co-thinkers. To split with the centrist progressive union movement "on the grounds that they are not good revolutionary militants is to reject the idea of alliance of the Communists with other elements in the labor movement, and to repudiate entirely the principle of the united front," Cannon and Foster charge, adding that the result of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party blunder was sectarian isolation. "We have lost the issue of the united front labor party and are fighting now for our own labor party, the Federated. As a consequence our comrades are largely isolated, and face a united front of all other elements against them." Convention delegates who voted for the new party and returned to their unions either recanted under the onslaught or were repudiated, Cannon and Foster state, noting "we captured the delegates for three days, but we did not capture their organizations for the FFLP. The claim that the FFLP is a mass party with approximately 600,000 members has absolutely no foundation in fact."

DECEMBER

"Communist Party Pays for Farmer-Labor Party Convention," by Emil Herman. [Dec. 1923] This unusual and valuable account by Socialist Party leader Emil Herman briefly details the Washington state convention of the Farmer-Labor Party, held in Everett over the weekend of Nov. 24-25, 1923. Herman states that "the Federated Farmer-Labor Party was born under the guidance and domination of the Workers Party" and that the WPA had lent the Farmer-Labor Party $500 to fund the mailing of its call for the Chicago FFLP founding convention, paid the expenses of some delegates to a pre-convention caucus meeting in St. Paul. Herman also stated that Washington FFLP Secretary John C. Kennedy had received dues payments from at-large members so infrequently that he was not even certain of the annual rate. The Washington state convention voted to “cooperate” rather than “affiliate” with the national FFLP, Herman said, adding that the FFLP was “truly an incongruous mass with aims leading in so many different directions that will end in division or dissolution —another object lesson in waste of time, energy, and money for the benefit of a few politicians...”

JANUARY

“The Labor Party Campaign: An Excerpt from the Report of the Central Executive Committee to the Third National Convention of the Workers Party of America,” by C.E. Ruthenberg. [Jan. 1924] The Executive Secretary of the Workers Party of America reviews the organization’s activity for 1923 in the Farmer-Labor Party in this report to the 3rd Convention of the WPA. The failure of the WPA to have its delegates seated at the Dec. 1922 Cleveland Conference of the Conference for Progressive Political Action combined with the FLP’s withdrawal from the CPPA over its failure to launch a new broad-based Labor Party spurred a move by the WPA to join forces with the existing (old) Farmer-Labor Party as its “united front” vehicle for joint political action, according to this account. With announced decision of the Socialist Party and LaFollette Progressive movement not to participate in the forthcoming July 3, 1923, Conference to establish a new “Federated Farmer-Labor Party,” the old FLP began to lose enthusiasm for the gathering, and a split with John Fitzpatrick of the Chicago Federation of Labor took place at the gathering. Ruthenberg is critical of the activity of the Chicago district of the WPA in the aftermath and attempts to document this group’s mistakes in contrast to the “correct guidance” of the Political Committee of the CEC of the Workers Party.

MAY

“St. Paul—June 17th,” by James P. Cannon. [May 1924] An article from the monthly magazine of the Trade Union Educational League lauding the forthcoming June 17th Convention of the Farmer-Labor Party, scheduled for St. Paul, MN. The St. Paul gathering was held in parallel with a July 4, 1924 convention of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, scheduled for Cleveland, which the Socialist Party was not incidentally attempting to steer in the same direction that the Workers Party was attempting to take the FLP. Cannon’s article attempts to explain this dualism. The CPPA’s “‘sympathy’ for the idea of a labor party is a disguise to hide their actual allegiance to the capitalist parties,” he states, adding that the CPPA labor leaders are unable to form a working class party “because they do not have a working class point of view. They do not live like the workers and they do not think like the workers.” Only the St. Paul convention offered a forum for the participation of the militant working class rank and file, Cannon asserts.

“LaFollette and the Communists: The Statement of Robert LaFollette on Communist Participation in the Progressive Movement, May 26, 1924.”An open letter from the time of Sen. LaFollette’s independent campaign for President of the United States decrying Communist participation in the Farmer-Labor-Progressive movement. LaFollette, whose campaign was supported by the Socialist Party to the extent they did not run their own candidate in 1924, here calls the Communists the “mortal enemies of the Progressive movement and democratic ideals” and declares that “all Progressives should refuse to participate in any movement which makes common cause with any Communist organization”—meaning the forthcoming June 17, 1924, Farmer-Labor Party Convention to be held in St. Paul, MN.

JULY

“Workers and Farmers on the Mark,” by C.E. Ruthenberg. [July 1924] An account of the June 17-19, 1924, Convention of the Farmer-Labor Party, held in St. Paul, MN, by the head of the Workers Party of America. The convention, dominated by the WPA, was attended by over 500 delegates, who drew up a program and nominated candidates for President and Vice President of the United States (Duncan McDonald of Illinois and William Bouck of Washington, respectively). The body also elected a National Committee, which in turn elected a National Executive Committee, which included Alex Howat of Kansas as Chairman and Clarence Hathaway of Minnesota as Secretary.

Gizmondo 2 Tech Specs | Now playing Dungeon Siege 2 which is pretty good (2005-09-26 07:43)

I found some information about Gizmondo 2. It’s a Gizmondo with different design, but the GFX tech specs are the same. Gizmondo used 64 MB of RAM and an ARM 9 CPU at 400 MHz. The Gizmondo is a waste of money and has been delayed many, many times.

- 480x272 LCD
- 550 MHz ARM 10e CPU
- 128 MB of RAM
- SD card
- TV output
- Vibration
- 3.5 Ah Lithium-Ion
- Bluetooth/802.11
- 2 analog joysticks
- USB 2.0
- 2 Mega pixel camera built in
- Windows CE 5.0
- MP3/WMA/HE-AAC audio playback, MPEG-4/H.264/WMV video playback
- Coming out Summer 2006
- Backwards compatible with Gizmondo software (14 games in all)

According to some gaming forum, this new handheld will fade out the Gizmondo before launched here at the same price as PSP. Gizmondo might have a shorter life than the Sega Nomad!

Yesterday, I went to Best Buy. Unfortunately Best Buy didn't carry RAM that's slow enough for his laptop. We both think the motherboard uses a maximum of 512 MB of SDRAM which Best Buy didn't carry. I was looking at the computer games and saw a whole shelf full of them. I had Dungeon Siege 2 for the majority of the time I was in there. Despite almost buying Battle of the Bulge and Patton DVDs and decided to leave with nothing. I looked around at the selection it had and bought Dungeon Siege 2 anyways. I asked for the DVD version of this game while he tried to convince me to buy Neverwinter Nights, but no.

Randy and I came back to my house to play PS2. The GFX are good considering PS2's limited hardware. In Winning Eleven 7, I won the first game when Randy fouling me via shootout against Randy's team winning that game. Then in the rematch between Brazil & Argentina he fouled me the same exact way and I kicked the ball, but he blocked it than scored a goal through my keeper who was tricked.

Afterwards, we played the first 2 levels in Halo 2 on Xbox. That was fun, but we weren't very good. I kicked his butt in Dead or Alive 3. That was fun. Now if only women around here looked that good. (being sarcastic)

Today, I'm playing Dungeon Siege 2. So far I was a merc for the enemy until I was taking prisoner of the opposite side. The creatures I was looking at were Orc-like anthropomorphic animal. Now, I've had been taking captive by the green elves and they've put a little death collar on me so I'm instantly dead if I won't do the green elf's bidding. The GUI looks the exact same as Dungeon Siege over three years ago. The controls are the exactly the same so the GFX engine was the only aspect which was improved. The character models are straight out of Dungeon Siege's lower resolution characters. The backgrounds look better than before and Dungeon Siege is a world with no loading times during the game. I'm not sure but it may look better than Neverwinter Nights. NWN was state-of-the-art in GFX in 2002, but I don't play it anymore. It's gets old and there are other videogames which wanna be played. (being sarcastic again) I guess I'm a semi-hardcore gamer. I find that talking about them is more fun than playing them. With exception of me playing Dungeon Siege today and 4 hours yesterday on PS2.

New games to add to list

All Your Bases are belong to Zero Wing (2005-09-30 08:49)

I know the fade is out, but I think I remember seeing it on a flying saucer animated GIF. It's ironic that Fox News had a story on it 3 years ago.

"How are you gentlemen. All your base are belong to us !! You are on the way to destruction. You have no chance to survive make your time."

I found out this joke is already 5 yrs ago and has been solved 3 ago old as in it's stupid and everyone whom thought it came from aliens got confused & used by a popular inside joke gimmick! Sorry. It appeared in a whole bunch of magazines.

Title Screen of Genesis

The reason why Japanese games have had good English translation now is to avoid "All Your Base Are Belong to Us." Most Japanese who weren't fluid in the English language probably spoke this way. Mostly at the end of World War II, English became an influence and they learn by what music they download or text they can translate via Babel Fish otherwise it might sound like that one popular phrase from the intro of Zero Wing for Sega Genesis. That intro was recorded in the GENS emulator into AVI than down ported to animated GIF using Animation Shop 3.0 or something like that.

Bought Digital Devil Saga 2 | Xbox 360 Game Impressions | personal webpage update (2005-10-08 14:10)

The Minnesota Gophers football team won the Michigan trophy for the first time since 1986! The Michigan Wolverines won against Minnesota 27 times in a row. The victory was won by a field kick with 5 seconds left. I saw that kick today. Michigan went for a blitz when it was their ball, but it failed. History indicates Minnesota won't be this lucky come next year.

Firstly, I called ahead and got for Shin Megami Tensei Digital Devil Saga 2 reserved for 10 minutes at Toyriiff yesterday until I got there. It only came an hour before. I knew I wanted this game for about a week. If I played handhelds more often I would've got Castlevania - Dawn of Sorrow for the Nintendo Dual Screen scoring 9.3 out of 10. It could well be the best 2D Castlevania yet. One thing I've learned is videogames aren't cheap and they hold my interest for now. Meanwhile while there I was eyeing Xbox version of Madden 2005 for only $12. My next football game will be on Xbox 360 although recently soccer has been my favorite sport to play. I haven't got to Far Cry Instincts yet. Best graphics on Xbox were a draw between Jade Empire, Far Cry Instincts, and Ninja Gaiden Black.

In my opinion, Madden 2002 is complicated for me. Madden Football 06 is coming out for Xbox 360 next month, but not before I buy FIFA 06. Soccer was always more enjoyable. I rarely see it played on TV or in the real world.

My birthday allowance could absorb most of the cash shock of buying Xbox 360. If I can't afford PS3 the first week then I won't get to write about it. I'll have to tough it out then. None of my friends will own one because they're not that interested in purchasing it. The Xbox 360 Pro retails at $399 next month, but worth it rather than paying for 3 flash cards for game saves. New games cost $59. What I shall do is not buy anymore videogames for two months so I can afford an Xbox 360 with hard drive add-on. I have the current generation of games to fall back on. I sometimes wonder about the success of Xbox 360 because half the people who eye it can't afford it. Wisconsin residents are spoiled paying half as much for current generation hardware, it'll be shocking to shell that money out. The good news is I'm shock resistant. I get to write a huge check to Wal-Mart next month.

What should I do? Write a check, or whip out four one-hundred dollar bills and a $20 bill from my billfold. I think paying it in cash will shock people around me. I can feel rich. Yep, 12:01 AM on launch day I'll be getting Xbox 360. I won't be wasting any time.

Here are my opinions on some of the launch titles for Xbox 360 starting with Project Gotham Racing 3.

Though the beta builds of PS3 games may look a bit better than PGR3 on Xbox 360 my TV has a lower digital resolution. In PGR3, I'll play the expensive exotic sport cars instead of the street cars in PGR2. This means every car in the game will have a minimum top speed of 170 MPH. Project Gotham Racing 2 came out on Xbox two years ago so Bizarre Creations must've spent over two years on this project. Yeah, but it does has best racer graphics.

Quake 4 is the primary first person shooter. It's an Xbox 360 launch title from Raven Software although the PC version is coming out October 18th. Raven Software has been known for their Soldier of Fortune first person shooter. ID Software gave Raven full rights to making Quake 4. It will feature Doom 3 PC GFX with similar mutant demons, but has both Single player (AKA Quake 2) and multiplayer including Deathmatch or Capture the Flag or Last Man Standing onslaughts. The story mode starts after Quake 2. My fragging skill level was horrible in Quake 3 since I wasn't a big first person shooter player at that time. Quake 3 was very popular in 2000 and I got a pirated copy from a friend that year. Quake 4 on Xbox 360 isn't able to download maps from the community yet. Third party maps historically were never above the quality of original maps anyways.

ID Software on the other hand is working on Return to Castle Wolfenstein 2 for Xbox 360 and PC. The old 1992 original and the 2001 sequel involved Nazi experiments gone wrong in 1940s Europe. There are no screenshots yet of this sequel. CW2 is using the Doom 3 gfx engine.

Dead or Alive 4 is popular because it's a silly fighting game and God is it annoying. Good graphics have double meaning in this game. The females are kind of busty with oversized features wearing the weirdest clothing accompanied with those silly foreign high-pitched voice-overs. It's been that way since DOA 2 on Dreamcast. This game may not suck in terms of game play, but first person shooters or racing games sound better.

You know the guys are staring at their legs or flapping boobs. Those games appeal to not so intelligent males and I'm moving onto bigger and better things like first person shooters and racing games.

Madden 06 is the Xbox counterpart with boosted graphics and better frame rate. The snow looks more like snow and the crowd no longer looks flat and the stadiums have an incredible draw rate (distance from zero). It sports 1024p progressive scan with Pro Logic 2. No analyzing either.

FIFA 06 will have to do because there are no other soccer choices. Like Madden 06 it's a straight port of the Xbox game /w next generation graphics while Winning Eleven 10 is next year. The draw rate has also improved much. The players are much more detailed, and analyzing is not present.

Elder Scrolls 4 Oblivion is basically Elder Scrolls 3 Morrowind with better GFX. ES3 had those lush polygons with texture lighting and anti-analyzing support at HD resolution 1200x1024 or 1200x960, and the community released texture packs replace every texture in the game as well as better facial texture packs.

The Xbox 360 will feature many more polygons than ES3 on any PC. I think it's popular just because it's a RPG which is rare on Xbox 360. Oblivion is set on the continent of Tamriel. The game builds onto all the major classes from ES3 ruled under the Imperial imperialism (again) with Emperor Uriel Septim VII voiced by Patrick Stewart. Oblivion will feature over 50 hours of recorded dialogue which takes up nearly half of the game's DVD-9.

The story starts out as the main character becomes a prisoner of the Imperials. The Emperor needs to escape through a tunnel connected to his/her cell to escape assassins. Tamriel has a lush, procedurally generated forest. The team at Bethesda actually consulted the University of Maryland geological lab in order to generate accurate algorithms for producing realistic environments.

So far what I've learned off the Internet this game will feature a lot more dungeons than ESIII had.

Too Human was Silicon Knight's Gamecube game before it got canceled when Eternal Darkness came out. It looks very, very good. Unsure it'll be on PS3 or not because it's looks so expensive to make from the screenshots. Microsoft is funding this project giving it that unlimited development budget feeling. Too Human is two games on Xbox 360. Too Human took the lethal Terminator theme and made its own version of it.

Gears of War is primarily the focused gun combat game for Xbox 360 despite Quake 4 coming out the same time because Microsoft will advertise it as if it was Halo. Game Informer calls it Microsoft's secret weapon. Epic Games developing Gears of War with superior graphics so the mainstream will appreciate it like Halo. This is the best looking Xbox 360 game so far which is probably why you've heard of it.

As for the story line. There is a world war on a far away planet over an energy source called imulsion which is like nuclear fusion in many ways The planet's cities look a lot like Earths. The government who controls Planet Sera (once striving with plant life after a World War suddenly found itself at war with a terrifying species appearing from the planet's crust. The game starts when all human governments form C.O.G. (Coalition of Ordered Governments) against the Locust army. The main character is Marcus Fenix who is trying to rebuild his reputation by leading the operation. There will be many times Marcus will encounter melee combat with Locust resulting in a mini-game. Like Master Chief, Marcus will command his platoon according to Epic Games. There'll be a co-op multiplayer option available via Xbox Live. Player 2 will control Marcus's friend Dominic who looks exactly like Marcus despite wearing a helmet. I'm unsure if it'll be my first game next month.

Oh yeah, on another note I've created a new website template made up entirely of vector graphics except those photos of me via Namo WebEditor 2k6. I made a new webpage since it's been 4 months since my last update. I didn't have time to do it and with the blogspot doing my weekly entries there was no need to do it myself. There would be less people coming across as well as more work for me, and less time info gathering information on stuff that interests me. The template is nothing special, but the lists are updated to present and that can make a difference in everything. There is no obligation. This webpage took me most of last night to do and been touching up with new ideas.

Emulated Sega CD and Lunar 2 Eternal Blue this morning (2005-10-10 22:44)

I could play Lunar 2 on EPSXE and BIOS on PC just so I can watch the FMV. Meanwhile, I've downloaded the Sega CD version of Lunar 1, Lunar 2, and Shining Force CD and unlike the torrent it never took 1 ½ day to download. Then I found out that MPEG was working on the PS1 emulator so I just stuck in the disc and looked at the intro. Heck, the Sega CD version took less than 30 minutes to download. The Sega CD version of the game was segmented in smaller RAR files and I figured out I had to have all five in the same directory to open it as 1 file. The Sega CD version had stuff on it missing from the Playstation version. I played the game with a Microsoft Sidewinder control pad which looks similar to a Genesis controller.

The graphics look outta date, but the intro of Lunar 2 was kinda interesting. Apparently that one girl from Silver Star was naked in the crystal so I saw that for the first time. Kind of shocking for 5 minutes in the first part of Lunar 2 showing 16-bit PORN! I never seen so many frames in a 16-bit cut scene! This wasn't possible on Genesis. This game was released again on Sega Saturn for Japan only in 1998 and Playstation in 2000.

I don't appreciate the 16-bit games now-a-days, now that Xbox 360 is coming out next month. Despite owning Lunar 2 for Playstation I've checked out the Sega CD version first. Normally a nostalgic game with cult status such as this would've been seen on a modern console.

X

SEGA CD Title Screen in all it's 16-bit glory.

I can't post it on Modblog because I might get into trouble. I searched on IGN and the guy gave it 10 out of 10 despite the graphics an 8.0.

Download them here and make sure you've got WinRAR or 7ZIP to open them. I used the SEGA CD BIOS and GENS emulator. I don't have a SEGA CD to play it on and that would require a Genesis ver 2. The game looks best by right clicking Graphics submenu with kreed doing a nice anti-analyzing effect.

X

Oh yeah, I checked out Far Cry Instincts on xbox is a full quantum leap forward from Lunar 2 graphics wise. Time I thought I catch up to the present day. On Catharton there was a small discussion when all retro games will be available on the internet to download from Nintendo's commercial service or others that come available.

Hi,

I'm sorry for being intrusive in to your blog. But I am Melissa and I am a mother of two that is just trying to get out of an incredible financial debt. See my hubby is away in Iraq trying to protect this great country that we live in, and I am at home with our two kids telling bill collectors please be patient. When my husband returns from war we will be able to catch up on our payments. We have already had a 2001 Ford repossessed from the bank, and are now down to a 83 buick that is rusted from front to back and the heater don't work, and tire tax is due in November.

I'm not asking for your pity because we got our ourselves into this mess but we would love you and thank you in our prayers if you would just keep this link on your blog for others to view.

God Bless You.

Listening to N64 (USF) audio for 1st time | Played UT2004 first time in months (2005-10-15 06:41)

I woke up at 4:20 AM and went on my weekly volunteer work at Wikipedia proving Cheeseheads existed before 1990 plus small grammar typos on some videogame entries. Then I went on Cathartion and told them I thought Audrey Hepburn was hot. She's dead now, but that girl had intelligence. After that I decided to frag in UT2004 using keyboard and mouse. I was spacing out during the game because I was missing 50 % of the enemy shots with the lightning gun. Can't wait until UT2007! Whatever happened during my experience doesn't leave the chair though! My weapon of choice is the flack gun even though the machine gun is the most powerful weapon in UT2004. I retreated into whatever direction the bots weren't. I agree capture the flag mode was the most fun.

I found a website that has N64 music files in their original sound quality. A Zip containing all audio files is smaller than one 64 kbps MP3 file 1 minute long. To play them you'll need a Winamp N64 audio plugin or a codec binary for XMMS. The website where there are some rips in zips is USF Central and Zophar's Domain. I'm listening to Goldeneye and Extreme G USFs although I also downloaded the Legend of Zelda, Super Mario 64, and Mario Kart USFs. Goldeneye 007 USFs sound excellent with their lossless compression. The ZIP file gives you all of the music in these games too.

Winamp info window

There is also SNES SPC plugin compatible with Winamp. I have more memory playing N64 games I guess making SNES irrelevant

X

Anyhow, I've had found some SPC archives at Zophar's Domain. I found a lot of music archives of SNES games there. SNESAMP (Minor) for Winamp works with all these files. Download as much as you want there.

Then I proved with screenshots that PS1 games can run in high-resolution via emulator with SuperEagle stretching at 1280x1040 resolution. I play PS1 games on a PS2 all the time. My PSone never is used at all. This is relevant to Playstation 3 since Nintendo Revolution will play N64 games in high-resolution and Sony announced PS3 won't emulate PS1 therefore it'll have standard resolutions of 640x480. It was possible of 3D because the all the power was in the 32-bit RISC CPU also in PS2 and PS2 Slim. That means the PS3 will have six CPUs all together as follows 1 IBM Cell, Emotion Engine containing 3 CPUs, 32-bit RISC for PS1 plus the RSX GPU. Isn't that too many?

The Playstation alternative is called Highly Experimental where you download the Winamp plugin to play PSF files which are smaller than MP3 too. To create PSF files you need a Playstation CD and PSFLAB application. However, almost all PS1 games use ADPCM (lossless wav file compression) to store sound. On a second thought this format won't help you rip audio files. To rip normal PS audio I use PSX Multi Converter which crashes if not outputted in WAV. The WAV can then be outputted to AAC or MP3 via CDEX or Nero Soundtrax

Today I had nothing better to do than playing more of Lunar 2 via GENS which was the focus of my last entry. I've got a game faq running on a 2nd computer so I know precisely what to do, where to go, how to defeat the bosses, etc. Maybe it's a waste of time since the PS1 version is the same as Sega CD...kind of silly. What I shall do is start playing the PS version because I'm not too far into the game yet.

React OS 1 yr later | Encoding with DivX 6.02 ! ;) (2005-10-16 11:39)

React OS is a little something I did on Christmas Day a year ago. And there has been two releases (0.2.6, 0.2.7) since then. React OS got Unreal Tournament and Mozilla to work via software acceleration. It has potential to replace Windows by 2007. ReactOS needs to come with an Active X Binary to view web pages in Mozilla Firefox. If you download the install ISO you get a partition otherwise the LiveCD will allow the desktop to show and it's suppose to read the Windows file system. Note that Windows 98SE installation CD used approx 400 MB. One day ReactOS will be fully compatible with Windows complete with 50+ programs! I may have to waste a CDR just to check out the improvements.

Last night I had Dracula encoded in DivX 6.02 at 1140 kbps 720x480 with 160 kbps MP3 ripped via 1 Click DVD Ripper. DivX 6 now supports AAC which is a good thing, but I'm thinking less plugin problems using the default mp3 option. Haven't made a DivX movie since February! My parents own these movies and this way I get my free copy! DivX looks comparable to the NTSC version. That's why next generation systems shall use MPEG4 pt 2. Blu-ray supports Microsoft's VC-1 (a super set of Windows Media Video 9). Xbox 360 VC-1 will be the testing grounds for Blu-ray / HD-DVD video. VC-1 has better quality : compression ratios than DivX 5 from what I've read on forums. My way is to compress the movie in real time instead of "dumping" uncompressed video on the HDD. Converting took several hours, but what the hay....got the time for it & still can fit 3 movies per DVD and I have 150+ of them DVDs. : -D

VC-1 is the official video codec of Xbox 360, Blu-ray Alliance, and HD-DVD Alliance. They all like Microsoft's work.....even Microsoft likes Microsoft's work. LOL!

Today, I decided to convert most of my MP3s into WMA9 at nearly half the bitrate with the help of dBpowerAmp. Very nice program dude. The audio can't sound any worse than it already is. I wish there was an option where it does half the bitrate for each one that probably won't happen. 73 kbps WMA encoded with WMA professional sounds like a 128 kbps mp3. The only thing keeping me from mass converting MP3 files is there's plenty of hard drive space on them. AAC is difficult pear 2 pear clients these days.

In other news I found a bunch of discs in my Jeep and one of them was my missing Knoppix 4.0.1 DVD I use for Linux Desktop since 09/05. That's the free Linux with tons of free tools. I was happy again!

2018: A Moon Revisited | React OS hands on (2005-10-20 09:17)

Hello again. Today has been the first day (me being slow in the space community) NASA's article about Apollo 2.0's mission of a moon landing in 2018 is legit. That's correct. NASA is enlarging Apollo model 3 times calling their new spacecraft Apollo 2.0 so four astronauts can step on the lunar surface at once instead of two. The astronauts will set up a greenhouse on the surface for experiments such as growing plants on our moon. Otherwise they can survive up to 6 days on liquid oxygen. I imagine high definition photos and movies broadcasted from the lunar surface easily streamed off 20 Megabit broadband in the future. It's only been 33 yrs since Americans last set foot on the moon. On Tuesday, I've downloaded React OS bundled with Qemu 2.0 emulating it on Windows XP. The mouse cursor moves about the desktop quickly and the latency for opening directories is 2 seconds. The problem about ReAct OS is the file system is a ROM image file accessible only through Qemu. Unfortunately, I couldn't mount the DVD-ROM or hard drive in DOS so I could run executables.

ReAct OS currently doesn't do anything other than read directories and files from the command prompt and Explorer. It doesn't recognize my CD-ROM yet although emulation could interfere. It's clear that WINE source code was used to run *.exe in it.

C Drive ROM

The Microsoft Windows Start menu

MS-DOS in the background /w DIR command working and Run window in the foreground doing shit for commands

It says Wine team in it.

Emulating the TOS 2.0 operating system with an Atari ST emulator was a previous experience of mine mounting my HDD in place of Atari ST's hard drive. Point taken that React OS hard drive detection should've been functional, but wasn't. TOS 2.0 only required a Z80 at 4 MHz with 1 MB of RAM to run at 100 %. Recommended hardware for TOS 2.0 was a Z80 at 10 MHz with 2 MB of RAM. Flash forward 15 years that's very primitive. My TI-89 Titanium runs a Texas Instruments operating system similar to TOS. It really hasn't been useful to me. Have been using my scientific calculator for math lately because TI-83 Plus and TI-89 Titanium are overkill apps! That and the manuals are long reading material that's boring. Fiddling around with them is much more fun. .

I feel I'll purchase Shadow of the Colossus for Playstation 2 because it got raving reviews on IGN (9.7 out of 10) and GameSpy (9.2 out of 10). IGN gave the game play and sound in the game a perfect score.

Master Chief on Xbox 360 | Xbox 360 deals with compression! | More info on Too Human (2005-10-22 11:10)Compression a hot topic on Xbox 360

From the sounds of it Xbox 360 has some compression issues with developers being sloppy this close to launch. The game code and audio quickly take up the 8.5 GB of the DVD than the developers have to squeeze in video. They have to compress the audio and video just enough so it fits. The games ARE completed however. Basically there is no set standard for video resolution on Xbox 360....

Chief Architect of Xbox and Xbox 360 James Allard quotes, "They're being a little sloppy with the CPU, they're being a little sloppy with the discs, they're being a little sloppy with their formats and compression to make launch. And next year, you'll see that they tighten that up so they can get more out of the system using the same disc capacity..."

To solve this problem Microsoft needs to shrink the size of the Xbox 360 video which isn't going to happen. It's inconvenient for people to swap discs in the middle. Sega and Nintendo never had problems with selling two discs in games and it didn't hurt sales. Star Ocean 3 had two DVDs and it sold quite well.

The Corporate Vice President of Microsoft (same guy) spoke he decided that Microsoft will be taking the heat of a world wide launch with a shortage of Xbox 360s rather than a North America launch and Europe complaining about not getting theirs on November 22nd.

The package I'm getting will come with

- Xbox 360 console
- Detachable and upgradeable 20 GB hard drive (needed to play xbox 1 games)
- 2.4 GHz Wireless controller (30ft. range)
- Xbox-Live Headset
- Component HD-AV cable
- Xbox Live Silver membership (useable right out of the box)
- One month limited trial membership for Xbox Live Gold
- Ethernet cable
- Bonus Media Remote

Master Cheif on Xbox 360 (playable character in Dead or Alive 4)

more Xbox 360 games

Yes, siree, Bob! Half-life 2 with the expansion pack is ported to Xbox 360 at 1248x1024 with all the fantastic effects from the PC version! I'm decided to playing it again yesterday. The crates are really bothersome.

At the start of the game, the G-Man speaks to Gordon Freeman as part of a hallucination, telling him that his "time has come." Freeman then finds himself riding a train into City 17, unarmed and without his HEV suit. Details begin to slowly emerge: City 17 is under the rule of a totalitarian administrator named Doctor Breen, the former administrator of the Black Mesa Research Facility in Half-Life. However, Breen is merely a puppet ruler who is carrying out the will of the aliens known as the Combine. It seems that the events of Half-Life were enough to attract the attention of the Combine, who soon after mounted a brutal assault on humanity in which the forces of Earth were completely overwhelmed in just seven hours (appropriately referred to as the 7-hours War). The Combine now has near-absolute control of the entire planet, with only a few pockets of human resistance remaining. Doctor Breen enforces his rule (and, by extension, the Combine's rule) through armies of intimidating "Civil Protection" units (also called "Metropolis" or "Metrocops") and Combine soldiers (referred to as the Overwatch).

Then Gordon Freeman goes ONE MAN ARMY RENEGADE STYLE and PUBLIC ENEMY #1 /w a lot of nice weapons. Did I mention every person in this game has at least 4 answers? The main characters in the game can really give you long lectures!

I found more info on Too Human currently under development by Canadian developer Silicon Knights The game's star is John Frank. John is a cyborg in year 2450 when Pure humans are near extinction. The plot is keeping pure humans from becoming extinct. The game was nearly completed for Playstation in 2000 spanning 4 CDs and great graphics, but it got cancelled. The gamecube project started, but got canceled too. The story line is based on Phillip K. Dick's four novels. Everything except for his organs could be replaced with cybernetic enhancements which is kinda spooky. I was wrong in the "What's out for Xbox 360" It's actually the aftermath of machines infused with humans. Silicon Knights is probably having the same compression limitations everyone else has and I doubt their sloppy with compression like James Allard commented.

Perfect Dark Zero is a prequel to the Nintendo 64 first person shooter Perfect Dark. The game is being developed by Rare Ltd. A moderate amount of info has been released and the summary is that it will be prequel to Perfect Dark and will reveal how Joanna Dark became a secret agent.

The game made a small appearance at Spaceworld 2000, an event exclusive to Nintendo. (At the time, Nintendo had a 49 % stake in Rare, making Rare a Nintendo second-party developer.) Since then, Rare has been wholly acquired by Microsoft. At the official unveiling of Microsoft's next Xbox video game console, Xbox 360, on May 12, 2005, it was revealed that Perfect Dark will be a launch title for the new system in the fall of 2005 [1]. Perfect Dark Zero has been on the Nintendo GameCube, Xbox, and Xbox 360.

Some of the early material released (particularly images such as this) incited speculation that the title would use a less realistic with the controversial cel-shading technique.

Full Auto is developed by Pseudo Interactive and published by Sega.. It is a vehicular combat racing game with quality graphics. It's basically Sega's version of Twisted Metal for PS1, PS2, and PSP. It's Sega's flagship title until the "blue blur" is on next gen.

Halo 3 will be the last game in the Halo franchise and the last Halo Bungie will make. Bungie was against a Halo movie which is now a split production between Twentieth Century Fox and Universal Studios. Halo is now produced by Peter Jackson.

Miscellaneous Xbox 360 info

A detachable 20 gigabyte hard drive is used for the storage of games, music, downloaded trailers, levels, demos, player preferences, and community-created content from Xbox Live Marketplace; it may also be used to transfer such content between Xbox 360 units.

A hard drive is also required for the user be able to play backward compatible Xbox games. During Microsoft's E3 Press Conference, Robbie Bach, Microsoft senior vice president and chief Xbox officer, said that the "Xbox 360 will be backward compatible with top-selling Xbox games."

The wireless controller has a battery life of up to 25 hours on the Li-ion rechargeable battery pack. The wired controller is compatible with Windows XP USB-equipped PCs...

A 12X DVD-ROM drive, capable of reading DVD+R/RW discs, will be part of the console.

It's only a matter of time before disaster strikes.

During a ride at night, you may face a situation when you break your keys in the ignition or the car door. This one is written for an audience of homeowners, but could be helpful for prospective locksmiths also.

Obviously this is worse case scenario

WISCONSIN: YOU'RE IN PACKER CHEESEHEAD COUNTRY NOW! EEEK! (2005-10-26 14:41)

Wisconsin comes from The Ojibwe word Miskasinsin, meaning "Red-stone place," given to the Wisconsin River. In 1634, Frenchman Jean Nicolet became Wisconsin's first European explorer, landing at Red Banks, near modern day Green Bay in search of a passage to the Orient. The state mineral is lead sulfide reflecting Wisconsin's early mining history. The state's nickname is "the Badger State."

The capital is Madison and the largest city is Milwaukee. Democrats owned the elections in the last five presidential contests. During both the 2000 and 2004 presidential elections, Wisconsin was considered a "swing" state considering we're equally split between Democratic and Republican candidates polls.

Known as "America's Dairyland," Wisconsin is also known for cheese. Citizens of Wisconsin are referred to as Wisconsinites. Among non-residents we're called "Cheeseheads," due to the quality of cheese making in the state. In other words the best cheese comes from Wisconsin cows.

Deer hunting is extremely popular. It's a sport, but not professional sport. Popular game is the white tail deer which is more populated here than the rest of the country.

The state is bordered by the Montreal River, Lake Superior and Michigan to the north, by Lake Michigan to the east, by Illinois to the south, and by Iowa and Minnesota to the west. Part of the state's boundaries includes the Mississippi River and St. Croix River in the west, and the Menominee River in the northeast.

In the north, the Lake Superior Lowland occupies a belt of land along Lake Superior. Just to the south, the Northern Highland includes the state's highest point, Timms Hill, as well as massive forests and thousands of small glacial lakes. In the middle of the state, the Central Plain possesses some unique sandstone formations like the Dells of the Wisconsin River in addition to rich farmland. The Eastern Ridges and Lowlands region in the southeast is home to many of Wisconsin's largest cities. In the southwest, the Western Upland is a rugged landscape with a mix of forest and farmland.

The state is home to the Green Bay Packers, one of the most successful small-market professional sports franchises in the country. Monday Night Football national broadcasts draw strong ratings during Packers games. Packers suck this year, and the Vikings won the last game! For a moment in the first half Vikings made the Packers look good, but it bit them in the butt winning the game by a long field goal three seconds left in the game at the Metrodome in Minneapolis.

Wisconsin is known for its beer, bratwursts, cranberries and OzzFest (where Ozzy Osborne, the British lead singer of Black Sabbath makes a cameo appearance in Somerset, Wisconsin every year. There is also 93X Fest which is another rock concert in Somerset, Wisconsin.

The racial makeup of the state:

- 87.3 % White
- 5.7 % Black
- 3.6 % Hispanic
- 1.7 % Asian
- 0.9 % Native American
- 1.2 % Mixed race

BASEBALL

The Brewers are in the Central Division of the National League and were part of the American League through the 1997 season, after which they switched to the National League.

The team was renamed the Brewers to honor Milwaukee's beer-brewing traditions after being purchased by Bud Selig. The brew team is made up of 32 Americans, 4 Dominicans, 1 Australian, 1 Mexican, 1 Japanese, 1 Venezuelan, and 1 Panamanian.

Miller Park opened in 2001 to replace Milwaukee County Stadium since opening season 1953. Construction cost of MCS was $5 million while Miller Park (Miller Beer owning large interest in the stadium) cost $310 million. Professional sports can use federal money towards building stadiums.

AMERICAN FOOTBALL

The Green Bay Packers joined the NFL list of teams in 1921 The Packers are currently the only publicly owned professional sports team in the United States. They are apart of the NFC North division of football. The Packers were once known as the Acme Packers (think loony toons in terms of acme). The team's Uniform colors are dark green, gold, and white. They were NFL champions on 1929, 1930, 1931, 1936, 1939, 1944, 1961, 1962, 1965. Super Bowl champions 1966 (I), 1967(II) and 1996 (XXXI) Typically, a team is owned by one person, partnership, or corporate entity; thus, a "team owner." The Packers fan base is notoriously dedicated: no matter how well the team performs, Lambeau Field has been sold out every game since 1960. The Packers have one of the longest waiting lists for season tickets in professional sports. Head coach is Mike Sherman and most popular football player is quarter back Bret Farve in his 14th year as quarterback. He also lives in Green Bay by the stadium.

Packers fans are commonly known as "cheeseheads," presumably because Wisconsin is known for its cheese production. To poke fun at this nickname, they wear foam triangles made to look like cheese on their heads, which further re-enforces the "cheesehead" designation.

PRO SOCCER: THE OTHER FOOTBALL

The Major Indoor Soccer League is the only current professional indoor soccer league in the USA. The league is a member of both the United States Soccer Federation and FIFA also known as Major League Soccer.

The Milwaukee Wave are the oldest continuously operating professional soccer team in the United States. The team was founded on August 3, 1984 as a member of the American Indoor Soccer Association and as played in every season and incarnation of that league

PRO HOCKEY

The Milwaukee Admirals are an ice hockey team in the American Hockey League. They play in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, USA at the Bradley Center.

Beginning with the 1973–74 season the Admirals joined the newly formed United States Hockey League. Their first season in a league was not particularly successful as they ended the season in last place in their division. They won only 11 games, lost 35 games, and tied 2 games that season.

Well aren't I the lucky one. The TV on the porch is now in my room for the winter. I can hook up satellite TV to it via long cable or my N64 as you can see. It's 23 inch composite I think.

I downsized the pics for dial up users.....I was one and it takes 15 seconds to load all the GFX on here.

The Sat modem and LCD TV hooked up to PS2, Gamecube /w Gameboy Player attachment, Xbox, Dreamcast, DVD player, and satellite TV reciever oldest computer working since Dec 2001. Athlon XP powered. Obsolete RAM composite TV right by my computer. Pretty new composite TV. Right next to it is the computer I use for everything. Has 2 GB RAM, Pentium 4, Radeon 9800XT. The composite TV I can hook up any videogame console too including the PStwo. I have to have my videogame consoles on the floor and is NP.

I never use this because it needs new GFX GPU card. It has a Geforce 5600 /w a June 2005 video driver. Has 786 MB or RAM

My Birthday present weighed two metric tons! (2005-10-28 11:00)

I am not going to get money for my birthday. Now it'll be tiny bit harder to buy an Xbox 360. Although I did get a vehicle instead! A gold 2000 Jeep XJ Sport! Yesterday, I was tricked into thinking I was getting my jeep winterized and my father drove me so I couldn't look at the oil dial and figure it out. He was actually bringing me to my birthday gift! Easily the most expensive one I ever had.

The other one was 11 yrs old and although it had few problems, problems would soon emerge. So now that's outta my hands, that one will be sold to a new owner.

The 2000 Jeep XJ for an early Birthday present. Turning 21 Nov. 1st. It looks like the one on the front page except its gold instead of white. The inside is digital instead of analog. In the white '95 Cherokee all the engine dials were analog except for the radio. It has 59,000 miles on it. Smells like new which is one trick of the trade of selling an used vehicle.

Because it's newer, the brakes and acceleration grab twice as quickly. Before i got it the washer fluid, engine oil, brake fluids were changed at the Chrysler dealership. The previous owner just happened to be the wife of the dealership president in Hudson, WI. I can't own it, but I can drive easily. By the time I got off my street, I had the acceleration figured out.

The vehicle has a KENWOOD (nice and expensive) Serris/MP3/WMA/CD/FM/AM radio that reads data CDs and sounds better than before /w build in speakers. I burnt a cd of some rock and trance mp3s to play in it. It must be a 2002 model because it's not on the Kenwood website.

Engine: Chrysler 4.0 L Power Tech I6, 190 hp

We got a good price on it.

About the Engine

The 4.0 L (3956 cc) EPH straight-6 was an evolution of the 258 and 2.5 and appeared in 1987. It had the same 3.88 (98.4 mm) bore as the 2.5 with a longer 3.41 in (86.7 mm) stroke.

Chrysler made an enlarged throttle body, and redesigned the cylinder head for higher flow. The Intake an Exhaust manifolds were also changed for more efficiency, and the fuel injectors were once again replaced with higher flowing units. The camshaft was also changed to a higher lift one. The net result of all these changes was an engine that made 190hp and 225 lbs-ft. of torque. The 4.0 was kept the same until the 1995 model year when small changes were made to the cylinder head. In 1996, the engine block was redesigned, and a new strengthened unit was used. The new block made use of more webbing cast into the block, and a stud girdle for the crankshaft main bearings. The Cylinder head was also again changed in about 1998, to a lower flowing, but more emissions friendly head.

X

The saying goes a Jeep grill is instantly identifiable by people across the world.

The most identifiable was Mickey Mouse.

A kenwood MP3 player!

X

Goes 100 MPH instead of 85 MPH in the last Jeep.

I found Konqueror 3.4 is coming to Windows sometime before WinVista. I modified a png to show what it may look like when downloadable. So far the project's only developer is using the web browser and not the folder explorer function. It might use GTK++ so it can run. The Gimp is the best known program using GTK++. Konqueror for Windows could be dead too, but I doubt it otherwise the site would've let us know about it!

On Halloween I want to dress up as Master Chief (Halo protangious) except there is no party for me to go too. DRATS! I haven't been able to use my new birthday present after that test drive around the 4 mile block when cops weren't around to pull me over! It's illegal to drive without license plates anywhere. I did it anyways because I really wanted to drive it! It's where there are a lot of hills with thousands of box elders with 10 % Blue Spouses (pine tree) and red oaks mixed in.

My mom had a Halloween party and all my aunts and aunt's friends wanted to see it, but I didn't right away. I feared they ask me if I owned it (and my Aunt Diane did ask) that's awfully a strange question because it's a present according to mom and dad except I don't have ownership yet. I gained $55 for Xbox 360. I'm unemployed as of now, and wouldn't want to pay for car insurance. My uncle who lives rurally likes to buy and sell things on Ebay so I gave him Knoppix 4.0. He'll probably get frustrated and throw the DVD a way.

Games I would've eventually had if weren't for the fact I'm saving it up for Xbox 360.

- Civilization IV – will be my first Civilization game and second Sid Meier game
- Castlevania Dawn of Sorrow – it's castlevania and it historically has been quite good in hack 'n slash genre.
- Soul Caliber III – Just because I own the first two Soul Calibers
- Fatal Frame III The Tormented - I own Fatal Frame 1 and 2 for Xbox, and two for Playstation 2. I could use this survival horror exclusive. You're only armed /w a camera and use it to stun your foe and run away before it kills you. No guns in this game.
- Tactics Ogre: The Knight of Lodis – umm, I own five anime based strategy RPGs for PS2 from Atlus and Nippion Ichi.

If you go to ign, you'll see a few collections over 700+. Yeah, it's my opinion. I really enjoyed Deathmatches and capture the flag which is why UT got #2 and #4. 12 Saturn games emulated on PC including Virtua Fighter, Nights into Dreams, Daytona USA, Rayman, Panzer Dragoon. (2005-11-07 17:38)

It took more than 10 yrs, but Saturn emulation is finally conquered! About a year ago I used Daytona USA and the sky was missing and wasn't playable. SSF 0.07 Beta however allows me to play Daytona USA! I can play all the games with USB Sidewinder, USB analog game pad or keyboard. The emulator seems to require a fast DVD-ROM, because Saturn's 2x CD-ROM requires near perfect emulation. I own all the games so it's legal. SSF may be the only emulator besides its commercial counterpart, GuriGuri, which plays games. SSF compatible with most of the Saturn software. I recommend Direct X 9 installed before using this version of SSF. Audio (usually AD-PCM encoded) is perfectly emulated. I never got audio before, it's a real treat!

Sega Saturn is a little more powerful than Playstation capable of more 2D sprites. The most famous game was Nights into Dreams. Saturn "died" in 1997, but it wasn't official until 1998.

It was night. My father switched the license plates so I can now drive the 2000 Jeep. I followed Randy on the right side of the interstate focused on his Chevy Silverado and it felt like 36° Fahrenheit in some thunderstorm, and couldn't find the auto close window button because it was dark for one thing and hydroplaning for another thing. Saturday night I put 40 miles driving to Menomonee, WI where I slept over at his house because he and I wanted to play Playstation 2 longer. When I got there, we played Winning Eleven Soccer 7. I won both times. He has a friend that lives upstairs in this kind of small house that he and his girlfriend rent. His girlfriend is a lot younger and we kept talking about how her dad wanted a new Jaguar or Volvo sports car? Those things are expensive. Randy and she sleep in same bed. I slept on a sort of comfortable couch in the living room. I went to sleep at 2 am, and woke up at 6 am. I decided to leave at 7 am because Randy didn't waking up in that point of time. I found Interstate 94 West right away. The on ramp was actually outta Menomonee. I listened to my burnt trance mp3 cd coming home to Warren township. He works in St. Paul six days a week where his 2000 Saab 9-5 is his primary transportation. He bargained it at a few grand ($1K) off the original dealer price and bought a Saab because he hated when his '93 Cadillac DeVille did a burnie at random intersections.

Hi Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site,

You have a very good blog here - quite rare these days! Also, I do like this post you've just added.

I've been here a couple of times looking for inspiration for my own blog, can't seem to get it off the ground though!

Anyway, nice one, I'll be back soon.

Regards,

Angie.

I am signed up for college courses in January so I won't have much time to play the videogames especially Xbox 360. First game may be Project Gotham 3. What else is new? More shelved games of course! Although, I was trying to play two yesterday. Again, I've stopped collecting for 30 days so I could get a new console. According to an internet polls Xbox 360 is leading popularity.

It's only 9 days until the launch. I'm worried about the line at mid-night. Sure, Hudson, WI isn't a real city, but it has massive surrounding population supporting videogames too. If reading videogame news on the internet is so addicting, it might be hard to get around to playing something. Right now I'm playing Resident Evil 4 for Gamecube for the 2nd time. I am at the part where I met this colossus for the first time after running through a haunted village. Yeah, I got that normal difficulty. The PS2 version is significantly more popular at the moment. I got that special "Only for Gamecube" version.

I developed a new webpage at AtSpace which gives me 50 MB free to use without banners. I upgraded my game list, added more pictures since I borrowed the graphics off TeamXbox, owned by IGN, but a spin off of Xbox.IGN.com. Last videogame I completed was Half-life 2 for PC. Half-life 2 was entertaining because it got #1 on my favorite videogames. I must of killed 60 combine near the end. The game industry's # almost overwhelms me. I have a long list of what to get first and I'm constantly choosing what ones are the most important. There is a rumor that Nintendo Revolution's real name is Futurna, but that's a lot of bullshit.

Hi Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site.

Great blog, particularly this last post you've added. I'm working on some vaguely similar projects myself. You have some good ideas but unfortunately I'm struggling to get started. I've got a few work-related sites set up but ultimately I want to do something more personal. Anyway, keep up the good work, I'll drop by again for another visit before too long.

Hello. Nice piece about Country List | Build new Webpage | Xbox 360 backwards compatible list out-of-the-box. I have a music blog that I'm trying to get going myself - just looking for a little inspiration! All I seem to have done so far is declare my undying love for Radiohead, the Killers and a rather large article on Live 8. The live 8 dvd is out today which should be fantastic. It's set to become the biggest selling DVD ever - not surprising really. Anyway, like I said, great blog and I'll be back again soon.

Random thoughts including 2 days 11 hours till Xbox 360 launch, Xbox 360 at Thanksgiving, silly dance music (2005-11-19 09:48)

Modblog has been down for half a week now. So Blogger is my primary blog server. Welcome those from Modblog if there are any of you :)

In 2 days, 11 hours, 8 minutes I believe I'll get the Xbox 360 + detachable HDD + Project Gotham Racing 3 than I come home extremely excited to play my new toy I might not get to the next blog entry until 10 hours later.

My 1st first person shooter looks to be Perfect Dark Zero. The N64 game was really, really good. Amongst the best games actually. Could well be the best first person shooter on N64. In fact, today, I was listening to Perfect Dark USFs (Ultra 64 Sound Format) on the computer and it sounds excellent. That's the track music. Better than any commodore music. Those are free too.

I completed Resident Evil 4 yesterday. It was extremely fun. Shooting zombies /w a shotgun was fun especially when I used the invincible cheat so I didn't turn into one. I got bitten 100 times and died a few time with the swinging butcher blades and that blasted iron maiden when I fail to get out. The hardest part I thought was that room with machine guns on every corner. Every once in a while a mad monk would shoot me in this room with one of those machine guns. I was really frustrated I couldn't get outta there alive.

This Thanksgiving Thursday I'll bring over both my Xbox 360 and Xbox over. My cousin, Brian signed into the USMC and he's shipped out. Master Chief must've gotten to him because Halo happens to be one of his favorite games. He's doing it for his country so I believe he's not there. We'll have turkey, stuffing, egg salad, pumpkin pie, Mountain Dew, Coke, and cheap beer (legally finally). I'll try a can of Coolers Genuine Draft. There is usually an American Football game on folk like to watch. It's probably Detroit vs. Dallas and the Cowboys are going to win!

Right now I'm listening to dance music yet again including ATB - 9PM Till I Come, Don't Stop, Underwater World, Ocean Trance, Ayla Part 1, Hold you, Marrakech mostly, then Armin - Galaxia, Blue Fear, Chicane - Offshore, overtune, Don't Gift Up etc. I've had been listening to these songs since December 2001 from the file dates in file properties.

Less than 21 hours to Xbox 360 launch. Mom's getting Project Gotham 3 for me when she comes home from work on Tuesday. I have a choice to either buy a game with my Xbox 360 or not at all. The choice of game would be Dragon Quest 8 or Perfect Dark Zero. Dragon Quest is the latest Square-Enix RPG and has some old school RPG elements. It's hard to decide. I see that 64 MB memory cards are $40, but I won't need them. I know I much rather have the external HDD.

Xbox 360 is out of stock before midnight ! Weird! (2005-11-21 23:55)

I showed up at wal-mart in Hudson, WI at 11:50PM and about 20 other people were waiting for theirs. Womble is right. The store sold out with 8 people to spare. Sad

I try to socialize. Told them all about me and Catharton Electronica. Why I like Xbox. None of them really cared because they wanted to go home and play their system.

Time right now is 12:40AM

The best game for Xbox 360 looks to be Perfect Dark Zero next to Project Gotham 3.

However, Target is open at 7 AM.

I drove back home and called Walmart and the operator said the store is the store underestimated the demand at midnight. Doh! Other larger stores buy 100 of these things to meet demand.

I don't have a Jeep Grand Cherokee to drive to Target so I'm not mobile for the rest of the day!

Although my mom bought Project Gotham Racing 3. The disc looks the same except now you can see how much information is on back because now the shadow shows.

Xbox 360 (2005-12-19 14:19:00)

Hi Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site,

I was doing a search for "Xbox 360 Game List" and your blog (Xbox 360 is out of stock before midnight ! Weird!) came up.

Bought Dragon Quest 8 | The mighty duplicates of games I don't own. (2005-11-28 20:23)

Recently I've bought a great Square-Enix RPG called Dragon Quest VIII for PS2. It has Dragon Ball Z animation in it. It took 1 year for Square to port all the good English subtitles and record all new British talent specifically for North America. It came inside box (not DVD case) because Final Fantasy XII demo was in the DVD case so the manual was too thick to fit. The box has some interesting animation on it. I believe DQ8 plays a lot like Legend of Zelda.

On Catharton Electronica, I am getting hated more and more as I got Xbox 360 games before the console and the only legal next generation gamer on it. Wombles calling me

"daft". Yeah, he's calling me that because he likes Nintendo much more, graphics aren't everything. Traditionally the GFX of next generation are #1 reason we're attracted to new consoles. Catharton members except me don't think so. However, I also own many Nintendo consoles so I know the tech specs on many of them. Womble is into the Sinclair Spectrum ZX and Commodore 64, Commodore Amiga and Atari Falcon (attack of British computer users!). He replaces bad parts and cleans them. I answer him directly but he's the most retro and extremely clever one on the forum. We argue. He usually knows what he's talking about.

I am driving to Wal-mart at midnight to buy Mario Kart DS or Half-life 2 for Xbox. I own all the Mario Karts except this one. It has a mix of 64-bit versions of SNES race tracks, N64 race tracks and GCN race tracks. N64 is included as retro console class now believe it or not.

I earned $20 by fixing my dad's laptop when the wireless software froze. He deleted all the files in the Linksys folder into the recycle bin. The cause was the nic was disabled in Network connections under Control Panel. Luckily I was able to enable the wireless nic and restore all the files to the Linksys directory than everything worked fine. Happy about that.

The ROM collection off my DVD.

Bought 2 new NDS games | Slow friendships these days mates (2005-12-02 00:08)

Tonight I've been listening to Cygnus X - Position 2002 over and over again. It's a trance song and the female vocal has a nice voice. At midnight I bought Mario & Luigi Partners in Time and Mario Kart DS at Wal-mart. I've heard that Mario Kart DS has most cleverly executed game play and therefore simply the best Mario Kart ever created.

WITC called my house asking if I want to continue classes in January 2005. After what happened last year to me. I can take it though. I'm strong. In CCNA 1 class, I haven't read as much as I should have which failed the class for me. I'm pissed off I don't have many friends there. Friends come and go. But I knew I didn't get help and none of the other students are gamers. I mean I really should read that book. Computers are my life. We're suppose to work like bread and butter. Doesn't seem too, but I'm focused. My future employer's agent who interviewed me last Friday probably seen my current webpage with all the game pics, game list, room pics, stuff by now and it might've been a mistake. It was to prove I could design webpages which is now true. I should've worked more on it. With so little information I find it hard to add.

I'm afraid of writing game reviews. I'm afraid I'm not good enough, but that didn't seem to stop me in the past. My older webpage has a whole bunch of reviews

I am going to forget owning Xbox 360 this year because Microsoft recalling the entire stock they sold and the shipment back to the customer isn't suppose to occur until 2006! The CPU heatsink is defective in 33 % of the Xbox 360s released in the United States. What's worse is the Windows partition on the HDD gives critical errors surpassing X360s with the fatal heat sink issue. When the Xbox 360 shuts down suddenly it's a heatsink problem. When it shows the Screen of Death, it's a operating system problem.

Randy visited | Bought Magna Carta (2005-12-06 03:21)

What did I do the last 4 days you're asking? Play Star Ocean 3 - Till the End of Time and Wave Race Blue Storm on TV and stare at the web browser. The action-time battle system is pretty cool in Star Ocean 3. I am not suppose to use one character to fight everything, but it works so I do it. My characters have powerful enough weapons to win the battles.

X

Not the smartest of choices, but buying another Xbox 360 game would've been silly without the actual Xbox 360. So instead we went over at Toyriffic in Hudson, WI to buy Magna Carta Deluxe Box Set for $60. It wasn't even my first choice. I got confused with all the games. I wanted something new and would've got Half-life 2 if I didn't already own it. Magna Carta is another anime RPG. I must have 50 RPGs! Gees. I remember when I had only one console RPG! (Sometime in 2000)

Then my friend and I played ESPN NHL 2K5, Winning Eleven 8 International, and Katamari Damacy (weird ass game from Namco). Not my cup of tea, but I might play it on Wednesday. I shall play more videogames and read less Internet. I scored an own goal on myself, but won anyways. Randy sucks.

We talked about Wisconsin things such the Taurus RAGING BULL MODEL 444 .44 Magnum REVOLVER he wants to buy in the future for hunting deer or using at the target range. I bet it's on his Christmas wish list too. Here's the play list Randy and I listened to while driving around in River Falls, WI and Hudson, WI. 35 degrees that day. 25 degrees today with chance of light snow which is usual Wisconsin weather. 55 degrees down to 25 degrees in 24 hrs.

I picked up the Mario Kart DS and it plays as well as Super Mario Kart should. If you like Nintendo characters you'll like it a lot. My favorite character is either Mario or Peach. I'm a fan of the N64 and SNES tracks. I believe in order to unlock the remaining 4 I had to place 1st in every one of those on 150cc.

And I need to check up on the registration of Century College yet and take an orientation. I'll be taking some required writing, math, and speaking some English report. I shall record MP3s at home when I'm confident.

If I went to Best Buy to spend money today I'd bankrupt myself. Being a smart lad. I won't buy the expensive computer hardware. I could get those insanely popular Apple iPods Gen 4, but the fact remains I have two mp3 players already. I want an Xbox 360. And Nintendo hasn't given me any idea what they're developing for Revolution! It's impossible to get excited for it.

This life of mine really sounds interesting don't it?

Gaming over Wild Blue Information (2005-12-06 18:58)

Here is my wikipedia article on my broadband ISP written mostly by me. I'll try to descibe my MMORPG experience over satellite in Wisconsin. The Winter cold does not affect my connection!

Wild Blue Communications is a relatively affordable Ka-BAND satellite internet service provider in the United States covering most of the geography. The Ka band (kurz-above band) is a portion of the K band of the microwave band of the electromagnetic spectrum. Ka band roughly ranges from 18 to 40 GHz.

The headquarters is in Greenwood Village, Colorado even though local transmissions are licensed out to stations in other states such as Wyoming.

The maximum bandwidth subscription is 1.5 Mbit/s down (256 kbit/s up) and always slightly less than that. The basic package of 512 kbit/s at $50 USD is approximately three times as expensive as dialup. The satellite equipment is approx $299 without professional installation. WildBlue claims superior performance both in terms of upload and download speed and also latency through its use of newer satellite technology.

First Person shooters are a big problem because of the 2 to 3 second latency between satellite and ground server, but MMORPGs for some reason are quite playable with no slowdown most of the time. The first person shooter requires the location of the node, what weapon and health the node has, and who she/he is firing at all in real time. MMORPGs are turn based combat so the player node bandwidth isn't as much. The recommended web browser for Wild Blue is Mozilla Firefox because WebPages load faster when surfing internal hyperlinks. Internet Explorer, Netscape, and Opera are fully supported.

WildBlue uses a 28 x 26 in (508 x 660 mm) mini-dish and external satellite modem to bring their service to customers anywhere in the USA. The modem connects to a PC or Mac much the same way a cable or DSL modem would, via RJ-45/ethernet to a network card. The modem updates it's firmware automatically.

The orbital Ka-Band commutation satellites used for Wild Blue is WildBlue-1 with some additional help from Anik-F2 satellite. WildBlue-1 was launched into low orbit early 2005.

Revolution tech specs Revealed (2005-12-07 19:38)

I found the official Revolution specs from Nintendo. Nintendo believes that high resolution graphics don't need to be HD therefore reducing the manufacturing cost by one half. Revolution is 2.5x the polygon output of the Gamecube. The Hollywood is based on the same agriculture as the Gamecube. We know that Nintendo will have 104 MB of T1-SDRAM, 16 MB of EDRAM, and 512 MB of internal HDD space to store ROMs and gamesaves. Revolution will have some cut down version of an IBM dual core 64-bit processor. Media will be single and dual layer DVD. Nintendo technical team is working with the original ArtX engineers. ArtX worked with Nintendo to build the Nintendo 64 and Gamecube. We'll have to see if Nintendo will package some free ROMs at retail! Hmm, the core system is expected to sell for $150 USD and games for $50 USD.

Known Games in development

Legend of Zelda

Metroid Prime

Kid Icarus

Super Mario 128

Super Smash Bros Melee Online

Ubisoft First Person Shooter (Far Cry Instincts)

Other technical specs

- WiFi with NDS
- Approx 2.5x better graphics than Gamecube
- Gamecube controllers ports and memory card ports on the right side
- Controller has a gyroscope
- NRV Controller used for NES/SNES games
- NRV Controller has analog stick attachment
- NRV Controller has spring loaded triggers
- Final version is smaller than the E3 prototype
- Neon light boards the DVD input
- Revolution logo has DVDs for "Os"
- Fully compatible with Gamecube SDKs
- Launch date during Thanksgiving 2006
- 100 % backwards compatible with Gamecube MiniDVDs.
- Plays movies for free
- Emulates N64, NES, SNES and quite possibly Sega Genesis and Gameboy

Advance

- Two USB 2.0 ports
- USB 10/100 RJ-45/Ethernet jack.

Care to comment?

First of all is Nintendo right with the controller? Is the controller a revolution?

Emulating Marvel Super Heroes Vs. Street Fighter, Marvel vs. Capcom, Raliant Silvergun, Daytona USA, Daytona USA 2 in MAME (2005-12-11 01:54)

I was reading reviews of what RPGs are coming to United States in 2006. There are seven of these including Final Fantasy 12, Disgaea 2, Atelier Iris: Eternal Mana 2, Grandia 3, Suikoden V, Xenosaga Episode 3, Kingdom Hearts 2, and whatever else comes out. Those are the only ones I can think of now.

And I am thrilled I got Marvel vs. Capcom - Clash of the Super Heroes running on my PC using MAME32. I own Marvel Vs. Capcom for Dreamcast so it's legal. It is 45.2 MiB uncompressed (22 MiB ZIP). I'm wondering if most DC games in the fighting genre are around 50 MB. The best part is when you insert coins (or hit start) the female goes, "Lets go crazy!" The music is like Street Fighter and Mega Man. It's like Street Fighter 2 Turbo or plays like it. On the 2nd level I get beaten. Then I got bored of the MAME version and played it on DC instead. I got to the 3rd stage using the controller (I don't own an arcade stick). Maybe I should! The controls in the emulator were somewhat goofy although I used a game pad.

Marvel vs. Capcom

Marvel Super Heroes vs. Street Fighter

Raliant Silvergun

Also I downloaded Daytona USA Twin Arcade (own it for DC also) and the game wants to network, but there is no network. I want MAME32 to override it. I also have Radiant Silvergun ROM (which works with a ST-V BIOS).

Plus, I downloaded 19xx, Air Change Blade, Gunbird 2, Daytona USA 2, GigaWing 2, King of Fighters '94, Marvel Super Heroes vs. Street Fighter. Pro Gear, and Radiant Silvergun from a ROM server. I've also been looking for IKARUGA without luck (also own it for Gamecube). I'll remember to ask for Marvel Super Heroes vs. Capcom next time I'm in the game store.

Meanwhile, the UPS mail man brought a HP ink jet printer to the door and told me it was for our family. Someone is getting a computer for Christmas. My mother wants a laptop to go on world wide web. I asked for an Athlon 64 X2 processor and 1 GB RAM in a new case. Who the hell knows.

Saw PSP with HDD | Working Designs filed Chapter 7 bankruptcy (2005-12-15 05:19)

I saw a 4 GiB PSP HDD from Datel (the British videogame peripheral manufacture). The device boots from the memory stick duo drive and the HDD clips onto the back of the battery department. This can be used for AAC, MP3, and game saves. Datel doesn't say how this affects battery life. As I see it the HDD isn't used all the time. When in the media player the MP3s are streamed and play for an hour. I guess PSP fans' dream has come true. It's probably the best Christmas present this year.

Having 128 kbps MP3 files instead of 64 kbps AAC doesn't bother me. The improvement in space doesn't matter to me. Finding a new device that'll play AAC files is not worth it.

Even though the PSP with HDD looks like a brick, I'd carry it around and can fit in my pant's pocket. How much it will cost?

In recent news, the RPG developer and publisher Working Designs filed Chapter 7 bankruptcy two days ago. It couldn't afford to stay in business because there are more RPGs now than 5 years ago. IGN says, "Working Designs final games were expensive to produce and were too obscure to make gains" Game Arts (developers of Lunar Silver Star Story, Lunar 2 Eternal Blue, Grandia games) got Ubisoft to publish their future games. Likewise, I haven't been able to play Lunar games yet. I rather read a review because there are smarter gamers who play it than me.

Working Designs has once released Magic Knight Rayearth on the Sega Saturn despite the company having lost source code in a hard drive dump and had to reconstruct it again. They lost money publishing it in the states because their fan base wanted them too further leaving the company in debt.

Computer I asked for Christmas to improve my gaming experience by 50 %.

Xbox 360: After it sold out! (2005-12-15 06:30)

The local news says it was the #1 toy and of course I knew that because I was at Wal-mart at 11:45PM November 21st with my dad's Grand Cherokee ready to buy it, but 15 people got there first and it got sold out. Went outta line to look at the display model for 30 seconds. Had $450 reserved for it. Then when I drove back I pleaded that I wanted him to drive into Target at 6:30 AM so I could be 1st in line. He had to take his vehicle into St. Paul, MN. I had my Jeep Cherokee with no license plate to drive. Knew it was going to be sold on Ebay 2x that amount. I don't have a pay pal or a card. Parents won't buy it off Ebay. I even got Project Gotham Racing 3 and Perfect Dark Zero. I have to wait until January when it's in stores. It's not just any toy; it's a next generation console with HD graphics and Project Gotham 3!

I never did get mine :(I feel horrible.

Top ten Programs of December (2005-12-18 10:12)

10 most favorite programs

1.) Mozilla Firefox, the reknown browser. I always have it open. Built on open source code since 1998. Internal popup blocker. Better than Netscape because the nightly builds are always less buggy than the latest Netscape browser. Not bloated. Skinnable.

2.) Winamp 5x - Been using it since 1999 to play music. Don't give it a second thought. Plays every music format known to man for Windows XP. Sounds better than Windows Media Player

3.) 7-ZIP Client - The only program for Windows XP that can make 7-ZIP files (better compression than RAR) Also makes ZIP, BZIP2, TAR, and Gzip achieves. Reads 001, 7z, aji, bz2, cab, cpio, deb, gz (linux), lzh, rar, rpm (linux), tar (linux), z, and zip. Also makes executable installers with 7-ZIP or ZIP compression like WinZIP for WinRAR.

4.) Microsoft Word 2003 - Self explanatory. All my text is spellchecked here and blog entries are written here. School reports are written here as well.

5.) Paint Shop Pro 10 - I create my graphics in this program. It's always less expensive to Adobe Photoshop Elements 2.0, but is less expensive and will do what most people want to create quickly except animated GIFs. JPEG2000 is supported.

6.) Nero 7 Ultra Edition - Creates quick accessible file systems for CD/DVD/DL-DVD/Blu-ray/HD-DVD burners. Previous programs make file systems that make the DVD-ROM lag twice as long or longer. Wave Studio is a good place to create AD-MP4 files with MPEG4 audio compression. The AAC files only have MPEG2 compression. Uses LAME 3.92 for encoding MP3s.

7.) Video LAN - my favorite video codec player. Doesn't crash and plays files without widescreen (or can do widescreen). Also is a server for streaming files off the internet, but I don't use it.

8.) CCleaner – A free utility that looks at your TEMP folder, Firefox internet cache, recycle bin, and other places to empty files

9.) Goldwave makes good AD-PCM, MP3 and OGG files. Does the same thing Nero 7 does. Also records desktop noise or your voice over the mic.

10.) AVG Free Edition file scanner – a free antivirus that is updated daily which updates itself without human input and when a virus is found it can be accessed directly so I can delete it manually.

Da Geforce 7800 GTX is in the specs of next PC! | playing Lunar Silver Star Story | really bored this week
(2005-12-23 14:22)

I asked for an Xbox 360 for Xmas, but I could have a PC instead. If I opened an Xbox 360, that would help my financial situation (I'm planning to buy it at first chance anyways). I want Condemned: Criminal Origins (horror survival game) soon after. I asked a XFX Geforce 7800 GTX or BFG Geforce 7800 GTX (which are clocked at 450 MHz with 256 MB GDDR3) Really frickin good graphics! Better than what a Radeon 9800 XT can muster (I learned that the latest video driver from ATI improves FPS count by 10 - 20 FPS since I bought it). The tested games I did was Guild Wars (45 - 59 FPS at 1600x1200 2x anti-analyzing) & UT2004 (35 – 50 FPS at 1600x1200 2x anti-analyzing with all the GFX settings very high quality). I expect a 30 – 40 FPS increase in my games if I got a next generation Geforce 7800 GTX. PC Games don't take advantage of the next generation Geforce 7800 GTX 512 (512 MB GDDR3 at 1.7 MHz, core clock speed: 513 MHz) therefore so expensive it's not worth the extra doe. With Geforce 7800 GTX 512 it is completely possible to play/run Quake 4 at the highest resolution with the ultra settings with 6x anti analyzing, with Geforce 7800 GTX, you'll experience the same game at everything a level lower at 7800 GTX with 4x anti analyzing with the same results. The difference is $150 spent on the card. Now the sweet thing about this is if your motherboard has two PCI-Expresses. Two Geforce 7800 GTXs running parallel would outperform a single Geforce 7800 GTX 512! Realistically the best video card in my parents' budget is the $250 Geforce 7800 GT. I just hope I don't get a Radeon X800 XT instead because that would lower my frame rate in game!

Moving right along. I've been playing Lunar – Silver Star Story (16-bit era Role playing game for Sega CD) on the PSX so I got as far as the Tempest Boss after Myight's Tower on Disc 1. I didn't die, Alex would keep attacking the enemy indefinitely with his sword (must be some kind of PS2 glitch). RESET! I might as well play Half-life 2 (the greatest PC game to some gamers) for Xbox instead. This game looks better than Phantasy Star 4 (technically used same hardware as Sega Genesis). To think I almost bought a Multi-Mega for $90 cos it is very rare was stupid thinking on my part and I am glad I forgot about it. Nobody wants it when there weren't any killer apps for it!

The Blu-Ray forum sayz consumer Blu-Ray IDE drives are coming out November – December 2006 along with BDR (24.4 GB burnable) 25 pack spindles on the shelves of major retailers! It'd be interesting if DVD will be enough space for videogames near the end of Xbox 360 and Revolution's lifespan! I have doubts about PS3 using 25 GB for videogames thou. PS3 does 1.8 Teraflops while Xbox 360 does 1 teraflop with CPU and GPU combined.

Tomorrow, AMC is airing "Christmas with the Duke" showing 24 of his shows back by back beginning at 5 AM for 2 days. Is anyone going to watch it? I plan on watching 5 movies including Flying Tigers, Sands of Iwo Jima, Hellfighters, True Grit, Rio Grande, The Comancheros, and Hellfighters. It's old so i might watch half-way and go play somethin'

1984 (2005-12-25 01:55)

1984 should not be remembered as a George Orwell book, but as a popular moderate Bible version and last Lutheran edition.

Concordia Study Bible

The NIV Study Bible is the #1 bestselling study Bible in the world's most popular modern English Bible translation—the New International Version. This best-loved NIV Study Bible features a stunning four-color interior with full-color photographs, maps, charts, and illustrations. This Concordia Study Bible has a 5 out of 5 on Goodreads while 1984 has a score of 4.1 on the same site.

I got a HP LiveStrong and Dual Core Turion 64 for Xmas.... (2005-12-25 14:50)

I got a HP Live Strong Special Edition laptop for Xmas with an AMD Turion 64 (that's what HP operator said) for mobile clocked at 2.2 GHz in it with 2 Benjamin Franklins ($200). The Turion is suppose to have 40 % more battery life than an Athlon 64 X2 which is why he bought it. It's been a year since I seen one. It wasn't from Santa Clause. I typed 'msconfig' into Run terminal and unchecked half the stuff in the taskbar (which made the computer slower than it needed to be). It only weighs 5.3 lbs with the detachable lithium ion battery and is 3 inches thick. I've been playing around with the Windows GUI which is very fast.

I don't like Cowboy Troy's singing (2005-12-26 21:24)

Listening too: Tim McGraw - Live Like You Were Dying

First of all there has never been a black country singer until Cowboy Troy got on K102. He hick-hops his country songs. It's not country, it's "hick-hop." Who likes hick-hop? I heard in Big and Rich Ballet. Think of hip hop mixed with southern rock. No, his songs aren't on all the time. No, he's not as offensive as Black Sabbath's songs. We need to keep songs like Garth Brooks - Dance, Confederate Railroad - Queen of Memphis, Alabama - Cheap Seats, Dwight Yoakam - Guitars, Cadillacs, and Brooks and Dunn - My Maria. Black people got their HipHop and Rap!

What's your opinion? Has anyone heard his "Our America"? "Our America" combines "The Star-Spangled Banner" with a rap version of parts of the U.S. Constitution, Declaration of independence, Pledge of Allegiance and Martin Luther King, Jr.'s "I Have a Dream" speech.

My gamer aspect wins me with cost advantages of Desktops (2005-12-29 20:38)

I've decided to trade my slightly used laptop for a new desktop PC because that's where the high end hardware is. A dual core 64-bit processor will let me play games without drops in frame rate while compressing video/downloading files, but that's only possible in a PC price for an asking price of $2000 so I am picking out this SystemMax Hellcat (assembled in the USA.... I feel so patriotic). I spend 75 % using 2D applications (IE: Firefox, Opera Browser, Winamp 5, MS-Word 2003, Trillian, Irfanview), but don't wish to compensate the GB/s on my GPU. Athlon 64 x2 4400 excels at desktop performance over 3D performance. I expect first person shooters to run high definition. My PC must run Unreal Tournament 2007 (or games using Unreal Engine 3.0 technology) The Unreal Tournament franchise is one of my favorite PC franchises cos I remember having fun playing all of them. My former friend Bob got me into it. I rediscovered first person shooters for PC two weeks ago.

I decided it was important to have a BFG Geforce 7800 GTX more than an Nvidia Geforce 6600 GT. The difference with texture bandwidth is a staggering 18 GB/sec difference. My PC will get great frame rates with the BFG Geforce 7800 GTX on modern games. Right now I am playing First Encounter Assault Recon after I bought it for $50 at Target 4 hrs ago. Target had 4 copies left. This game came out in October so I am not playing it when it was immensely popular. I am having a hard time running F.E.A.R. on my two year old PC at 1200x960. The only way F.E.A.R. runs at a decent frame rate is by setting the "ATI Display Preferences" to application preference.

Submitted Specs to dad.

What I can put to good use from my other computers (X86 Clones)

Sparing 1 GB of RAM dual channel PC3200 (Dell Dimension XPS)
108 Mbit WiFi PCI (custom-assembled PC)
Extra drive: DVD/CDRW-ROM (custom-assembled PC)
Sound Blaster Audigy 2 24-bit EAX Surround Sound (Dell Dimension XPS) Inexpensive, but rock solid CA 5.1 surround flat speakers
Generic keyboard
19" Dell 75 Hz CRT computer monitor

On a further note, the X2 4400 has come down in price, but so has the X2 4800. This means I can add such luxuries as a Soundblaster Xtreme 24-bit 192 kbps soundcard and another 250 GB 7200 RPM hard drive. The question is do those advantages outbalance 200 MHz extra that an X2 4800 CPU will give me?

I already have an answer to this question. It's smarter to go with the X2 4800 because heck, I can afford 250 GB hard drive ($100) myself and can install a fully functional Sound Blaster Audigy 2 out of my Dimension XPS. I imagine the extra HDD would show up as a "D Drive" like my USB 80 GB external HDD. I know in the real world money is a problem and I can't throw $250 at my PC.

Here are videogames I chosen in the last 25 days excluding Mario Kart DS and Mario and Luigi 2. Spent $300 on software this month. Software is expensive, but I am a serious software collector.

Have computer, will blog :-)

Buying Call of Duty 2 tonight | Will consoles have big hard drives and download services in 2016?
(2006-01-04 18:04)

In 10 years time everyone will be downloading 5 gig files regularly anyways. In 1996, I had a modem that handled 33.6 kbps, now I could get a broadband connection in town with 4 Mbps. Purchase online and download it - 1 hour later, you're playing it! Children don't have credit cards and some people like to pay in cash whenever they can. US broadband speeds are verrrrrrrrrrrry slow compare to the rest of the world cos I am only getting 1.5 Mbit. The rest of the world has 8 Mbit connections in the middle class range.

By 2016 Gigabit speeds will be nothing special for those who want it, If videogames have blown out to 50GB by 2016 over a 512 Mbit connection...a 50Gb download would only take (50x8)GBits/second 0.5Gbps = 800 seconds! 50 GB BD will do the same job 8 years sooner...this is the truth. The game industry knows the USA lags behind the rest of the world in broadband. North America buys more games than Europe, period. Still, we've been playing games off the hard drive for 16 years on PC. I know I'll be getting 250 GB minimum in my new PC. The HP LiveStrong is shipped back as we speak and it'll be another week before I can purchase the Systemax Hellcat as a late Xmas gift.

- A.) Nintendo Revolution's hard drive is 512 MB containing NES, SNES, and N64 game images.
- B.) Xbox 360 has a 20 GB external hard drive for lossy music and expansion packs.
- C.) I periodically download 3.3 GB Linux ISOs such as Knoppix or 1.5 GB ISO for OpenSUSE
- D.) The Playstation 3 hard drive will have the latest free Linux installed on it. Hook up your USB keyboard and mouse to make it a functional computer.

Today, I went to Century Community College although it wasn't the first time. After taking the orientation (the rules), and I signed up for mathematics. The consolders were nice there so I was polite. After all, The school isn't up to date with their computers. They're still on Pentium 4 3.2 GHz with hyper threading, 1 Gig of RAM, 120 GB hard drive. We have a society that grew up on 32-bit processors for a decade thinking this is as much power as they'll ever need. It seems that our society grew up with Intel because it's in all our schools and most people's computers. I rarely see any AMD processor except at my house 'course. The Pentium processor has made famous in stability and the 64-bit Intel Xeon is famous in super computers (the IBM Blue Gene). Athlon 64 burns less heat due to lower clock frequency, but that doesn't make them perform any less than a Pentium 4.

This school hasn't made the switch to Linux or even OpenOffice 2.0. Somebody was stocking me today, but it was one of the consolders as I never stayed in the same place. Didn't make friends - yet, although I faced up to people and shouted "Firefox rocks", "What up, what up", "Anyone like southern rock...anyone at all?" and stuff than I was silent the remaining of the time. Kept electronica music out of the conversation knowing the conversation would be silly, kind of weird.

Hey, I am going to purchase Call of Duty 2 not on Xbox 360, but PC because FPS play better on PC with keyboard and mouse over analog pad. The main character is the Russian sniper from Enemy of the Gates. It is my first pick over Soul Caliber III, Ratchet Deadlocked, and Castlevania Dawn of Sorrow. Call of Duty 2 also had the highest score. I played Call of Duty two years ago in 2003 and 2004. The Quake 3 modified game engine looked excellent three years ago. I enjoyed F.E.A.R a lot. The game was creepy, but I wasn't scared and wanted to get in the middle of the action. The lighting special effects were brutal on my Radeon 9800 XT taking a big hit on the frame rate! I played through half of it before I repartitioned Windows XP. I needed a fresh installation to begin the new year with. Now, I'm thinking of installing F.E.A.R, Doom 3, Half-life 2, Unreal Tournament (1st one), and Call of Duty 2.

I completed Lunar the Silver Star yesterday, and am thinking of playing the sequel before school starts on January 12th. It'll be tough completing Call of Duty 2 and Lunar 2 in one week because I would have to play everyday.

Today, I am going to drive into Minnesota and see if there are any Xbox 360s in the suburb of Woodbury like Best Buy, Toys R US, Circuit City, Game Stop, and Super Target. I bought the Xbox 360 version of Call of Duty 2 to support the next generation further.

Turrican II on my Virtual Amiga (2006-01-10 18:42)

I was bored Saturday so I bought a pack of 10 DL-DVDs instead of Xbox 360 at Best Buy. I figure every place was out of them. Yesterday, I was playing Soul Calibur II on the PS2, beat Arcade mode with that female with sword and shield. I had fun so I bought Soul Calibur III yesterday. Soul Calibur III has a customize character mode, but it makes up a MB of memory card kind of like NFL or Winning Eleven franchises.

I might be able to increase my processor from a A64x2 4400 to a A64x2 4800. I am unsure if I can get away with the price of $2400. I might have to decrease my GPU from a Geforce 7800 GTX OC to a 7800 GT OC. The difference is two pipelines and 4 GB/sec texture bandwidth lost. One of the great things about a A64x2 4800 is it can be over clocked to 2.6 Ghz and be stable for 3D games

I downloaded WinUAE 1.11, the only emulator built on reverse engineered data. Amiga 2000 came out in 1987 by Commodore. The Amiga is hard to emulate. Make sure you got the kickstart 1.3 ROM or you won't be able to run anything! Get it at <http://home.online.no/mrroboto/pacmania/the-emulators/the-emulators.htm>

Today, I drove to Best Buy, but was 1 hour after the second Xbox 360 sold at Noon. I am betting that next Tuesday the store gets new shipments! Meaning I'll be there. Instead I bought Lunar Eternal Blue Complete, but I had Quake 4 in my hands for a long period. O-Well. I am not very excited for Quake 4 anyways.

Athlon 64 X2 4800 (2006-01-15 08:49)

Yesterday, I downloaded 5 CD ISOs (3.3 GiB) of SUSE Linux 10.1 beta 1 for my new PC. I must trust Windows XP for PC games which is why dual boot is necessary. My SysMax Hellcat got an unexpected upgrade...an Athlon 64 X2 4800 which is roughly as powerful as Athlon 64 FX-55 (step up from A64X2). The integrated sound will use the CPU to process 7.1 surround sound with EAX 2.0 environmental enhancement, but this can be avoided by installing an Sound Blaster Audigy 2.

I got bored so I looked at my 4 books full of baseball cards (my collection before videogames) That is 1989 - 1996 baseball seasons. Despite sticking baseball cards to my wall, it was only masking tape, so my baseball cards don't seem affected. That took 10 minutes.

Baseball card collection

Randy hasn't come over for three weeks and I know Bob won't. If he did I would try to buy an Xbox 360 over in Minnesota.

Here's some frame rates out of the latest PC games and higher is better bundled with Nvidia's latest GPU, Geforce 7800 GTX OC. Geforce 7800 GTX OC is $550! This config is ready and able to play Unreal Tournament 2007 and Elder Scrolls 4 at 1600x1200! My motherboard comes with a second PCI-e slot so I can stick another GPU and make it 512 DDR instead of 256 DDR! I know that 1 PCI-E card is running at PCI-e 16X, but there isn't dual PCI-e 16x slots. Only 1 Nvidia Nforce 4 motherboard supports dual PCI-e 16x slots. An ATI Radeon 1800XT is 5.2 % faster than non-overclocked Geforce 7800 GTX. I used ATI Tool for my Radeon 9800 XT getting a 6.7 % increase in core clock speed (core 412 MHz, OC 440.7 MHz).

Bought a Turtle Beach Montego DDL with 7.1 Dolby Digital Live! Surround Sound and EAX 2.0 (2006-01-21 22:53)

I went to Ruby Tuesdays restaurant with my parents in Stillwater, MN to have an Ultimate Burger Supreme with everything and I talked about TVs and soundcards. Burger tasted great. Then we're talking about the successor to UHF and VHF TV bands (that isn't satellite/cable) in shortwave band form. It's a black box that receives digital signals (MPEG4 stream) hooks up to your coaxial connection.

Then I bought something really awesome! A 7.1 Dolby Digital Live surround sound card called Turtle Beach Montego DDL, cutting edge technology that rivals the Sound Blaster X-Fi, but is $50 less. Same specs at least. $130 less with 64MiB X-RAM. What's 64 MiB X-RAM? It is audio RAM for games that support it. Could well be the best sound card for $80 USD. For speakers I normally use mini-headsets that fit inside my ear. I also have Cyber Acoustics 4400 5 piece 4.1 surround sound speaker system, but I don't use them at all. I like the room quiet.

I suspect that Tigerdirect meant 5 business days when they shipped my PC on Tuesday cos it's not here yet. I thought the postal service didn't take holidays off. I also bought a PCI card with adjustable dual fans for $19! What a bargain it was! My other PCs need their case fans and case fans are so inexpensive! I'll show pictures once I get it without the Montego DDL obviously.

I might be able to get into Minnesota Life College, but I don't know anything yet. This'll help me be successful in life and my computer more than likely will stay home for I would have an apartment. Little disappointed I can't tinker around with the PCs there like i can with my own.

Just two more days till I own four computers! (2006-01-23 22:56)

I am/was an ATI graphics user for the last 2 ½ years supporting Radeon 9250 and Radeon 9800 XT videocards for PC gaming purposes (ie: UT2004, UT2003, Neverwinter Nights, Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction, Dungeon Siege, Dungeon Siege 2, Knights of the Old Republic, Doom3, Half-life 2, Elder Scrolls 3 Morrowind, F.E.A.R., The Sims 2). I was not kind to my Radeon 9800 XT by overclocking it, running settings at highest possible resolutions and it never failed on me (just error popup infected ATI drivers released after September 2005 :-). Then I find that Geforce 7 series has better frame rates and edge over Radeon X1800 series at the moment in demanding PC games. BFGTech, a licensed Nvidia manufacture is my choice for future graphics needs. On Tigerdirect, the Radeon X1800 XT 512 is getting 4 % performance over a XFX Geforce 7800 GTX. Nvidia Geforce 7 is known for it's superior Doom 3, F.E.A.R. frame rates averaging around 80 fps at 1280x960 and 60 fps is considered fluid to the retina. The Geforce 7800 GTX succeeds Athlon 64 with 260 million transistors vs. 233.2 million transistors. It's clearly one of the most advanced GPUs to date. ATI on the other hand got superior frames on Far Cry. Looks like 3:1 ratio to me. Yes-sir-ee-bob! I mean both cards can play these PC games at 1600x1200, but anti-analyzing affects both cards so it must be off. Truth is games don't have to be at 1600x1200 on a 19" to look great. It can easily look just as good at 1248x1024 with 4x anti-analyzing. Better then what I have now. I don't have money for two Geforce 7800 GTXs and I am planning to gamble on an Xbox 360 in stock at Best Buy tomorrow. Geforce 7800 GTX OC is l337 at the moment!

My SysteMax Hellcat is delayed due to Tigerdirect's contract with some 3rd party semi trucking company. Dad and I have complained earlier about this, but truth it's been shipped and no GPS tracking like before. Arrrrrg! Tigerdirect.com is located in Florida and I am living in the "middle of the Middle Midwest". But on the positive side of things this PC will have a single 250 GB HDD plus an external 120 GB Fantom Drive giving me plenty of space at the moment! Basically anything not using 100 % bandwidth of an IDE cable is not on my IDE hard drive such as DivX movies and MP3 collection. Right now I have 120 GB + 120 GB to my exposal. Whoa snazzy!

Sometimes my CPU load averages 80 – 90 % continuously starting at random times. I get BSoDs occasionally too. I can't explain it well except a Trojan horse might trigger it. I am positive WinXP Service Pack 1 is more prone to viruses than Service Pack 2. I shall download the update because better late than never!

X360 owned! (2006-01-24 17:00)

I drove to Target and got this plus a $50 warranty. But not before I was looking at Quake 4 and Dungeons and Dragons for PC. Teenager clerk asked me what games I owned so I told him. My checking account didn't bounce after the transaction! At home, I was watching the Project Gotham Racing 3 FMV and noticed it has a lot of trance music in it like Robert Miles. IGN gave PGR3 a 10/10 in sound saying comes in Dolby Digital 5.1 Surround Sound. On the back side, there is a fan and it blows hot air making it the hottest videogame system I had. I was going to buy a PC game, but I didn't see any Xbox 360 in stock, but they were in the back room. Graphics are 720p, but my LCD TV's resolution is 1280x960. Forza Motorsport (favorite game right now) comes close to PGR3's graphics. It comes with a PC power cable and a power box is huger than the one inside Xbox. I've been playing 3 hours on two AA batteries so I don't know how long it'll last. Buying Lithium ion batteries would last even longer, but buying a lithium ion battery pack would last longest I imagine.

Second game I tried was Dead or Alive 4. On my TV where the graphics were resized made it look a lot like Dead or Alive 3 from 2001. That's not the X360 fault. A major factor was upping the game from Teen to Mature so the game could kind of appeal to the hardcore gamer crowd. I always thought that boob bouncing had to do with sexual themes. Dead or Alive Extreme Beach Volleyball has been rated Mature just for bikini aspect.

Xbox 360 plays half my games on it. If you go to <http://www.xbox.com/pcsetup> you'll find that you can transfer mp3s/wma to the hdd wirelessly via WiFi. You have 12 GB to your disposal after all the WMV and WMA pre-installed the hard drive.

The power box is gigantic

12V output

120V input

My SysteMax Hellcat hopefully will come in tomorrow.

Systemax Hellcat (2006-01-26 18:15)

I woke up today expecting a PC and I got one and I had a hard time pushing the box inside. I couldn't find the activation code, but it was in back. It is a Athlon 64 X2 4800 and I overclocked it 200 MHz. It came with Windows with Nero, PowerDVD, RealTek sound equalizer. I had a heck of a time plugging in IDE cables into both DVD burners when switching them to different bays since it was easier than taking a sliver tool to remove and reset the jumpers differently. After that I installed a lot of software including Suse Linux. Haven't installed any games, but you bet that I'll install some tonight and test my new videocard. The RealTek codec sounds very good better than the Sound Blaster Audigy 2 in my opinion. This is only tempary until my sound card comes in 3 days or so. On the Suse Desktop the sound is a little distored, but until Monday or Tuesday when the Turtle Beach Montego DDL this problem will dispear! I was looking at Ultima Linux, but realized that I like Suse 10 better just because I been using it since 2002. By the way, I figured out you can play MP3/WMA's in a videogame off a thumb drive on Xbox 360 by pressing the controller's power button.

Goodbye and so long Gizmondo! Installing SuSe 10 on almost every PC. Top 50 selling PS2 Games of 2k5 (2006-02-01 18:51)

I found that Irn Bru (Iron Brew in World War II era) is illegal in the United States, but Mountain Dew (the Pepsi soft drink) is illegal in UK and her common wealth realms. Mt. Dew is my favorite citrus drink.

In recent news, TigerTelematics which launched the 64-bit Gizmondo handheld will file bankruptcy on January 31st. In the United States, you can buy a region free Gizmondo in mall strips. This handheld's software is many many times worst than PSP's small selection of games. Sony wasn't the one that went bankrupted were they. The executives of TigerTelematics received millions dollars each for founding the company. The handheld had no worthy games. The Gizmondo 2 prototype has 128 MiB of RAM and basically as powerful as the Tapwave Zodiac 2.

In layman terms, "Haha, Gizmondo sucks. They deserved going bankrupted! Hahahahaha ha ha ha."

For the price of one Xbox, I can buy 3 or 4 videogames so buying an Xbox isn't worth it. In fact the only reason I'd buy an Xbox is because I don't know how to replace the laser piece and would require a soldiering gun to get the static resistant goop off it. Next, I need a credit card handy (which my parents refuse to do) to paid for one online. That Xbox 360 really diminished my spending this month too. It was worth it to support the next generation games. It's suppose to be the best videogame console ever (in fact it is to me), but I am playing Lunar 2 on PS1 and Halo on PC. Games coming out this month I want.

- Grandia 3 (PS2)
- Winning Eleven 9 (PS2, Xbox)
- Elder Scrolls 4 Oblivion (Xbox 360, PC)

I downloaded the 586i HDD installation DVD of Suse Linux 10 for my only friend Randy, but he refuses to install it on his computer. I mentioned Suse is free and dual bootable. He says me better not saying his computer is too slow. I'll try to give it to him anyways. I mentioned it comes loaded with Firefox 1.0.6. You'll see Windows XP on every computer in office, school, and business including all my computers at home. It's getting kind of crazy. The only reason you'd see Linux is in terminal using in WITC's Linux class. When I was there the foundation was Redhat 8.0, but WITC should have by now changed to either Knoppix 4.0 or Suse 10. I missed that school, but it would take a long time to pass CCNA 1 and 2. Last time I tried, I almost got a B- on CCNA1

I am installing Suse 10 on my custom PC which has an Athlon XP 2800 and 786 MiB of RAM and a 200 GiB Serial ATA hard drive because Suse is cleaner, more stable and faster program launching than Windows XP. Memory management is much better. At least 128 MiB less resources used at any given time.

Halo on my SysteMax Hellcat was running fluidly at 1248x1024. This exceptional Xbox first person shooter plays good on PC and I had it on normal, but my skill demolished over the time I was playing RPGs on console. The Havok engine actually looks dated (but it came out in 2003) but it's still decent looking with no Geforce 7800 GTX anti-analyzing support.....not an issue. Game play is where it's all at, and it plays like Halo on Xbox! That's a very good thing. The graphics don't look any better than playing Halo on the Dell Dimension XPS with the Radeon 9800 XT, but the frame rate improved. The game doesn't take advantage of the new technologies in the Geforce 7800 GTX due to compatibility with DX 9.0a video cards. DX9 was released by M $ in late 2002. Games coming out in 2006 require DX 9.0c.

My friend said he is coming over day after tomorrow to my house so I have a gaming partner finally. I have to earn $40 for an extra Xbox 360 controller for Randy. The two AA batteries in the controller lasted me 6 hrs without dieing! That's a good thing.

And for random gaming facts here is the ranking of software sold for Playstation 2 in 2005

1. Madden NFL 06 (Electronic Arts 2.95m)

Are you knowing that CCNA is entry level right? Not worth much on as single, you need to get CCNP or CCIE. CCNA is everything very simplified, CCNP is minimum for good job today, CCNA only start point, many more tests before useful grade.

Are you knowing that CCNA is entry level right? Not worth much on as single, you need to get CCNP [/quote]

Everyone who goes to class knows it. My math is below average, and my reading is average, and my memory skills below average. I was getting B- work (84 %), but the final tests I would fail (2 chances). The dilemma is my parents hardly know how to use a computer, and i have no NT connections. Century College screwed me when the MN tuition costed WI residents 650 dollars registration fee. Now, i thought of going to MN Life College

Project Gotham Racing 3 review / Modded Xbox 360 (2006-02-05 14:22)

Randy came over and we played Madden NFL 06, Winning Eleven 8, ESPN Football 2k5, Forza Motorsport, Project Gotham 3, Perfect Dark Zero, Dead or Alive 4, and the new game I bought at Shop Ko, Kameo Elements of Power. He says I have a crazy game collection and that I should develop games being artist or something. I said okay Randy, I'll think about it.

I got to eat with him at Mc Donalds and we talked about the future of Microsoft and why Suse Linux 10 isn't popular. I said, it's free because every programmer volunteers and no one gets paid under the GPL license. He wants to go fishing with me in the woods, but I just said no. Best fun I had all week. He said it's more fun than working as manager for Mars Inc everyday when his cell phone interrupts us 15 times.

A modded Xbox 360 costing $650, but the first time I seen it done to a gaming console. Found it off Ebay.

PROJECT GOTHAM RACING 3 REVIEW

Bizarre Creations is the developer of the first two and they made this game look better than Full Auto (Sega), Ridge Racer 6 (Namco), and Need for Speed Most Wanted (EA).

The cars are high resolution. There is 6 modes, inside, hood, bumper, 3rd person view close, 3rd person view far. I like the 2nd prospective of 3rd person view myself. You can see the curves better like in a lot of racing videogames. The 1st person view it is harder to see a curb and you hit it and your speed automatically goes to 15 MPH on these exotic GT and sport cars. I picked the white GT car from a auto manufacturer I haven't heard of. The PS3 version of Gran Turismo Vision and MotoCross looks better, but this game is clearly the next best thing. PS3 is just going to have better GFX, and there is nothing MS can do, but have the developers take advantage of the 3 3.0 GHz cores the best to their ability and make games look better than PGR3 in two years. It makes me wanna save up for PS3 now. I am unsure if gamers this generation will be as true to their system (the PS2) as last generation since the PS2 had a huge following and the worst gfx (if you don't count DC), but still had those 10/10 in GFX ratings like Resident Evil 4, God of War, Metal Gear Solid 3, Tekken 5, and Gran Turismo 4. X360 must have a single game that has a perfect graphics score before the system dies. In 2005 only 4 games managed to get a 9/10 in graphics (Dead or Alive 4, Call of Duty 2, Project Gotham Racing 3 and Kameo). The rest got 8/10 in graphics in reviews.

You'll go into tunnels, see high resolution textures on buildings and stuff and the draw rate is impressive right now. There is nothing better in arcade or home console on the market. That Outrun 2 arcade game using Xbox hardware and F-Zero AX using Triforce hardware is no longer top of the line graphics, although still above average in arcades which is okay, because it implies that the law of dimensioning returns is true. Don't blame Xbox 360 generation. Blame advance technology or complain technology is too advance for videogames. If that is your problem than you're one of those retro gamers that play old consoles today and find it fun. That's the main difference between us and them!

The Kutos

The Kutos existed in Metropolis Street Racer for DC also developed by Bizzare Creations. Kutos are trick points and are spent between drifting, winning points, # of cone driven through in a role exactly like Project Gotham 1 and 2. In this game like other games before it, it is important to pull off drifting tricks while staying in 1st place. Not playing it on "very easy" nor "very hard", but instead at the medium/average/normal level.

The Music.

The music is in Dolby Digital Live 5.1 Surround using 64 channels of the X360s sound hardware. The music genres include electronica, hiphop, dark electronica, Alternative Rock, and classical, Japanese pop. You can choose to shuffle all tracks, play one genre or listen to your own music off the USB port. The Intro FMV soundtrack is some kind of trance too. There has got to be 12 songs in each genre making it 75 songs in all!

The engine sounds are all great and realistic. Better than anything I hear in the real world. The crowd cheers me on with those semi horns in the background crystal clear

The Gameplay

You have speeds above 160 MPH on street tracks in tropical locations, London, and New York, New York. The cars responds quickly to the Xbox 360 controller which drift like rally cars. Making this on the boarder line of Xbox and Xbox 360. It's using mostly current Xbox generation game play mechanics, but it's a launch title and a pretty damn good one. If you think Xbox launch was better because it had Halo, it is true. However, X360 does have Halo 3 coming out. The right analog stick is not used at all because it is a racing game (unless some 3rd party comes with an analog pad with controls on the opposite side, but it's not true yet) You start the game with an incredibly thick wad of cash and are allowed to choose from some of the "lower end" cars that the game has to offer. In my case, I had to suffer through the purchase of a Class B "street illegal" GTR as a low end car.

Conclusion (not on average)

9.2 out of 10.

fried another motherboard (2006-02-08 17:01)

I came back from Shop Ko with my new purchase Castlevania Dawn of Sorrow and decided to open up my Hellcat and do something stupid!

After yanking the power light and hdd LCD wires off the jumpers on the lower right corner it cost me a $140 motherboard when the computer gave me the lethal orange light. After swearing 6 times, tried to fix it without success by trying re-inserting the jumpers with the power on (big mistake), and told dad the story. He forgave me and bought the same motherboard online. I wanted to find the headphone jack wire and hook it to the sound card while refitting the WiFi card since it was loose. I was grounded with a bracelet because it was in the wall socket the entire time. Using today as a prime example why I don't install motherboards, I pay someone else $100 to do it for me so I could undo what I've done.

I have my former computer arrangement. This day must've been the most bizarre day all month. I am suppose to have a headache, but I have none. Even after I punched myself I don't have a headache.

This week I am been 100 % anti-social with anyone other than my parents. I like being antisocial. The internet is my security blanket. On the positive side, I got to play Halo on it before today. And no I don't dream of videogames or better PC hardware in my sleep. Instead I dream of imaginary girlfriends and exotic dreams with women. I need more allies which is why it's fun dreaming as if I were with people.

React OS running Win32 apps (2006-02-13 00:58)

I felt Wikipedia done a better job than i could so here is public domain stuff encyclopedia on Retro OS. I didn't use the Qemu this time because it doesn't come with any open source software for me to work with. Windows XP is still obviously better OS. However, React OS is free (and source code is available) Microsoft has this thing about not showing source code that prevents people from coping their kernal exactly.

The truth is Microsoft is a monopoly in business, home, school PCs and it's not hurting us if something else can do it. Windows has the advantage uns everything (Win32 applications) without crashing while React OS is much more vounderable ot them. React OS can't even execute many applications, but the compatabily is nearing 100 % with new builds.

ARTICLE

ReactOS is a project to develop a free software / open source operating system that is object code-compatible with Microsoft Windows NT and Windows 2000 applications and drivers. The project is currently in the pre 'Alpha' development stage, although some of the project's goals and milestones have already been achieved as of November 2005. ReactOS is primarily written in C, with some elements like ReactOS Explorer, written in C++.

Various components of ReactOS are licensed under the GNU General Public License, the GNU Lesser General Public License and/or the BSD License.

To ensure that no part of the OS is tainted with leaked Microsoft code, a total source code audit has been ordered by the leading ReactOS developers.

History

Around 1996, a group of open source developers started a project called FreeWin95, with the aim of implementing an operating system that would be a clone of Windows 95. The project stalled in discussions of the design of the system. At the end of 1997, the project still had no results. The project members called to revive the project, the project's target was changed to Windows NT and the project's name was changed to ReactOS. The ReactOS project began in February 1998, with developing the kernel and basic drivers.

Allegations of disassembled Code

On January 17, 2006 Hartmut Birr wrote a message on the ReactOS Developers mailing list (ros-dev) with the accusation that ReactOS contains code derived from disassembling Windows. [1] As a result of the allegations, the project has decided in a closed meeting to suspend public svn access, forum, discussion and e-mail archive. All but access to the old subversion repository was been restored shortly afterwards. The project has also decided to audit the code to look for possible code that wasn't a clean room reverse engineer and make all developers sign an agreement to only use clean room reverse engineering. This is expected to set the project back by a lot as it could take years to complete the audit and rewriting of affected parts of the source code. This audit was done by creating a new repository and copying code from the old repository as it is audited.

Functionality

As of 2005, the ReactOS kernel is quite stable, many APIs and ABIs are ready for a higher level of development and a basic GUI is available. ReactOS features ReactOS Explorer, which is a basic shell for ReactOS, similar to Windows Explorer.

Version 0.2.0 of ReactOS is able to run many Win32 applications, including Notepad (a basic text editor), Regedit (the registry editor), Cmd (the command-line interpreter), and several other applications (such as AbiWord) and basic games (such as Quake and Quake II, and the Wine clone of Minesweeper).

Since 0.2.6 Dillo, mIRC, and a DCOM components of the Mozilla Firefox web browser (using the Gecko rendering engine) run in ReactOS. Some games like Unreal Tournament and Deus Ex are confirmed to work, using software rendering. Also OpenGL runs with some minor problems, using the nVidia driver or the software implementation Mesa 3D. And the first webserver (Tiny Web server) and The UltraVNC Client are reported to work. As shown in the screenshot on the right, even OpenOffice.org (Version 1.x) works partly.

As of Version 0.2.8, some elements of TCP/IP Networking work, as well as a better number of applications, such as Notepad, AbiWord, OpenOffice, Deus Ex, and Unreal Tournament. Sound and USB support is still being worked on (SB16 works partially, and USB OHCI and UHCI work is still being undertaken) The USB functionality is 'borrowed' from Cromwell. Plug and Play work has also begun, as has the move to support WDM. In addition to the Lynx text-based browser, ReactOS can use DCOM components from Mozilla to browse web pages graphically.

ReactOS 0.2.8 can also detect whether it is running in a VMware environment, and can install the SVGA Driver from the VMware Tools ISO, to provide a better level of GUI performance. CSRSS has also been totally rewritten, and a 'written-from-scratch' implementation of Ws2 _32 is scheduled to arrive very soon. Also present in the Trunk are somewhat-working elements of ddraw, dplay and dplayx.

Currently ReactOS is being audited (see above section) and currently does not function at all.

Related projects

ReactOS works with the Wine project so that the ReactOS project can benefit from Wine's progress in implementing the Win32 API. These efforts mainly concern Wine's DLLs, most of which can be shared between ReactOS and Wine. Both projects work on cross-compatibility issues, so that the remaining few DLLs can be used in ReactOS.

Another related project is Samba TNG, which implements dozens of services, such as LSASS, SAM, NETLOGON, SPOOLSS, that are key to the success and (functionally correct) interoperability of the ReactOS project. Samba's architectural design and strategic goals make it a difficult prospect to consider integrating into ReactOS, whereas Samba TNG's multi-layered and modular approach make it far easier to consider porting each service to ReactOS.

Future

The ReactOS roadmap indicates release (0.3.0) will include full TCP/IP networking support. ReactOS Developers are also currently working on support for USB. For this the Cromwell version of the Linux implementation is ported. Also being worked on is the www.reactos.org homepage.

ReactOS developers are working on improving the GUI system, adding networking, multimedia, and plug-and-play hardware support. Java and .NET support (through Mono) has also been stubbed. After multi user environment is developed Terminal Service and Remote desktop will be developed, for this XRDp, VNC and rdesktop will be used. Provisions for DOS, OS/2, and POSIX subsystems have also been made, in a similar fashion to the Windows NT subsystems.

In October 2004, the goal for version 1.0 was articulated as a stable implementation of a subset of Windows Workstation ("ReactOS Workstation"), including TCP/IP networking, client-side and server-side support of CIFS, OpenGL, DirectX and support for Windows device drivers via WDM.

Among these, some have stated that several well-developed open source operating systems already exist. (Currently all based on or modeled after Unix: Linux and the various variants of BSD.) They feel that rather than building a new operating system, it would be better to concentrate on improving these and work on Wine so that they can better run existing Windows applications. However, ReactOS developers argue that an OS which is more like Windows at a lower level (that is, designed to be similar to Windows rather than running an application that tries to turn an OS into Windows) is more likely to achieve broader compatibility with the existing base of Windows applications.

CFL's cheerleaders don't suck! In fact they're pretty good. (2006-02-15 14:15)

Why does the CFL cheerleaders look better than the ones from around here! It's a crime. Canadian cheerleaders just look heathier and cuter for some reason.

Course the NFL doesn't fire cheerleaders because they're not cute enough. That's the problem. CFL just has better looking cheerleaders! NFL should do something such as hire cuter cheerleaders! (Canadian cheerleaders rock!) I know I am only using the Vikings and Renegades for example, but the Green Bay Packer's haven't had cheerleader squad since 1988. Why the heck not?

Renegade's cheerleader webpage vs.

MN Viking's Cheerleaders

What's crazy about Canucks is you can't tell them apart from Americans! It's like impossible without ID. True, Canada is our closest ally. We hunt up in Canadian so that gives them freedom to come down here whenever they want too. You can walk around and meet a Canadian without knowing it! It's normal. They have the same accent. They drive the same vehicles, use NTSC like we do, play gridiron like we do called the CFL (it sucks compared to NFL, but it's American Football!) And NHL, NBA, MLB are sports both countries share (all have Toronto teams people.) They don't get involved in any military activities with US except the North American Aerospace Defense Command.

And the metaphor about no Americans....no American football (for worldwide popularity) is entirely untrue like other countries say. They say that on purpose to make gridiron look bad. Idiots. It's a wonderful game! Girls play soccer. It's a women's high school and college sport. That's why the Women's FIFA team is #2! Football is a man's sport!

Motherboard and CPU not fried! | 2 internal + 1 USB HDD (2006-02-18 11:02)

On Friday, I got my computer back without motherboard and CPU fried, just some misconnected wires on the jumpers. The friendly folk at Digital Garage in Hudson, WI set it back to normal. There was no way I knew how to install the wires back to normal. I asked them to set a RAID 0 between 2 hard drives first, but I changed my mind. I wanted a JBOD (Just a bunch of disks) instead and I did that myself to reduce the bill dad paid. During partitioning the WDC WD2000 with Partition Magic windows froze and I now have a goofy HDD BIOS that makes the arm hit against the platter making a clicking sound along with slow boot up. To resolve this I'll eventually buy a Hitachi 160.0GB HDD to replace it. Now, I am left with the SeaGate ST3250823AS 250 GiB hdd as IDE4 Master and Maxtor Ultra 160 GiB hdd as IDE3 Master.

At Toyriffic a while ago I looked at Wipeout 64, F-Zero and Ridge Racer 64, but I didn't buy them due to missing ID. I found mixed reviews for them. That gives me more money to spend on Elder Scrolls 4 or Grandia 3 or I can purchase a new hard drive. I am undecided.

Randy didn't answer his phone today. I can go anywhere, but the thought of staying home, playing a PC game, and enjoying my Hellcat also interesting. The weather outside is brutalsnowing, icy roads, and 20° (12 below) with windshield.

Popularity of GIF (2006-02-18 15:00)

When I used PNG I became less popular than when I used GIF. LZW compression in GIF uses twice the storage as deflate compression in PNG. PNG is open source, GIF was unpatented in 2003. Both PNG and GIF show up in any browser released in 1999 or later. That's 7 yrs ago. Who uses IE4 or Netscape Communicator 4.7 anymore? I want to know.

IE 5.0+ supports transparent png Okay everyone, I'll stop using PNG. I understand now. Animated PNG is actually be SWF (Macromedia Flash) because it supports PNG and JPG

I emulated SNES and GBA on PSP | installed 160 GiB hard drive (2006-02-20 16:07)

I bought the Hitachi 160 GiB hard drive at BEst Buy yesterday for $70 because it was on sale. I love it so far. I was being an airhead because I couldn't find my static-proof bracelet to install it. At Best Buy I looked around and all the SeaGate 120 GiB Serial ATA hard drives were sold out. Teenagers were chuckling about something when I was there. Okay, okay. This hdd is no big deal. Everyone has them. Doh. I knew that. I was trying not to act irrational and thankfully I had my head screwed on tight.

At home I took a tweezers and set the jumpers to slave mode, installed it, hooked IDE and power cable to it, used Partition Magic 8 to format NTFS and wal-la....instant "G drive"!

I promised using GIFs

Funs over...alrighty then....

It was midnight and I looked at the largest forum on Earth, gaiaonline.com. It has a gaming section. First time I've been there. It got a 58 page long PS3 vs. Xbox 360 vs. Revolution thread. I paged through pgs 1 thru 12 before getting tired (it was civil kind of) so I go back to my home forum (Catharton game forum). There are some loonies on Gaiaonline.com (one can expect this of the world's largest forum). I learned most members are PS3 bias. They apparently knew about programmers lost their jobs telling about Xbox 360 being better cos they haven't seen the "end product" on their blog I hope when PS3 comes out the hardware quality isn't crappy.

Afterwards I went on Wikipedia and made Extreme-G and Extreme-G 2 articles. I had nothing constructive to do on Pres. Day so I gave Doom 3 another go on Xbox. Xbox breaks a sweat running the game, but it plays like a high quality first person shooter. I frag average in my opinion. I played the first 5 levels in Goldeneye with the 1964 emulator with my game pad too.

I also emulated SNES and GBA on my PSP for the first time. I played Super Mario World, Super Metroid and Metroid Fusion on PSP. Only glitch is when the PSP goes in standby (LCD turns off) the SNES emulation lags. I took photos to show everybody. I own the original cartridges so it's legal. Moving the analog stick goes into emulator graphics settings. Audio is 99.9 % like original carts. Playing those games brought back memories of 2004 when I bought SNES and GBA SP.

Converted MP3s to aacPlus! | Bought Condemned Criminal Origins and Resident Evil 4 (2006-02-28 08:50)

I converted all my MP3s to high quality [A]dvance [A]udio [C]odec Plus a couple days ago using Nero 7 aac after reading an article on it. I reduced 20.9 GiB to 8 GiB using a pc with 1 GiB dual channel PC4000 and another one with 2 GiB dual channel PC3200 RAM. I kept all my mp3 achieve in case I find a few MP4s with sound glitches. The quality of my aacPlus mp4 files are $\frac{3}{4}$ 64 and 80 kbps while $\frac{1}{4}$ are 96 kbps. I gave a friend 2.5 GiB of my MP4s so he wouldn't have too. Saving 13 GiB of space was sort of worth a day re-encoding everything. No regrets.

Randy is those people who hates Nintendo. He has a NES, but was also his last Nintendo branded console. I got him to play F-Zero GX and the NDS. I was Capt. Falcon. He was Pico. I won three times. Afterwards, we played the only map available without playing the single player game, Temple, and he fragged me 6 to 3 in Far Cry Instincts....

I got pretty excited when I purchased Resident Evil 4 for PS2 at the Wal-Mart in Hudson, WI despite owning it for GameCube. I told Randy that it was topping all the videogame charts and I wanted it even if. We were driving around town. Gamespot.com gave it a 10/10 in graphics and sound, 9.5 in game play and presentation, 9.0 in replay value. At night, I drove us to a newly built Super Wal-Mart in New Richmond cos I was wondering what it looked like inside. We looked at various power tools, blank dvds, and cheapo fishing rods.

He wants to take me fishing, but he doesn't understand I don't want too. You literally sit in a boat and leave the line in the water for 10 minutes before something bites. Sounds really boring. Don't eat until you catch something....what a joke! I said, "No, you won't make me" He responded, "We're going fishing this summer and you're coming with!" This reminds me of that stupid movie "Gone Fishing."

New games to add

- Resident Evil 4 (Capcom)
- Condemned: Criminal Origins (Sega)

Tomorrow, I'll be discussing Nintendo's Revolution. Don't expect much when there aren't any screenshots. Games should be worse looking than M $ Xbox 360's games. The NES, SNES and N64 software emulation (ie: Nintendo virtual console) doesn't take much CPU power at all at original video resolution.

Hacked my Diablo 2 character profile today. (2006-03-04 00:12)

When there isn't anything to do, there is a PC game that I haven't played for 8 months called Diablo 2 and I used Hero Editor on it. The program has a txt extractor of my stats. So what do you think? In August I am going somewhere where my PC isn't therefore no point playing on closed Battlenet anymore (cos my hero will be deleted after 1 week of inactive account)

Played Battlefield 2 | converted mp3 to WMA10 for mp3 player | taking testing to get into a college (2006-03-10 01:19)

Yesterday, I bought Grandia 3 and Onimusha Dawn of Dreams for $95. Originally I thought of purchasing Onimusha Dawn of Dreams. Thought it was more fun buying 2 games. I looked on Gamerankings and Onimusha had 90 % at Gamespot and Grandia III had 77 % at Gamespot.

Playstation 3 is coming out after this October, but before January in the United States. Launch titles are still unannounced. I don't expect to walk in at midnight and expect to purchase one. I may be at Minnesota Life College (if accepted) when it comes out so I can't get one. It's up to my parents to get it as my Xmas present. Otherwise I'll ask for quad-core Athlon 64 with compatible motherboard...Something tells me that 4 cores are better than just 2 cores. I spend countless hours on my PC.

I guess I lost some concept of buying used games because I always buy new games which can be twice as expensive. The solution is to stop buying games when they come out. In my head when I go places in the XJ I always buy games at full price. I understand that.

Since 3 days ago I haven't played a game since Diablo 2. I haven't played many of my newer PS2 and Xbox purchases. Doom 3 and Far Cry Instincts were fun games, but I didn't finish them for reasons unknown. My attention span got unusually short! It doesn't feel the same as 8 yrs ago when I played Goldeneye. Plus I was curious what WMA10 would sound like so I encoded 880 songs in the format plus it works with Zen Touch. So I did.

Here is Battlefield 2 running on my PC. This isn't DirectX10 games (better looking games) that require Vista to run. Looks nice... I don't move stealth like so I die quickly. I have to learn to move stealthy.

My Perfect Dark Zero review (2006-03-18 02:57)

Say today I thought of posting my review of Perfect Dark Zero. I took a test to get into MN Life College. I've done bad in math and memory, but good in reasoning. Score is coming back in 3 weeks. REALLY BORED. I've played PDZ for 4 hrs in a role. I can't handle any longer than that. I already told you want I think because I like games (more when I was younger). I might want to play Dragon Quest 8 but am in the process of getting the 3rd level in Perfect Dark Zero. I feel like an amateur,

As for my personal life. Alone all the time. Won't kill myself....am mentally stable person. On the computer all day of course. Way too much computer! It's okay for now, but I really should find a job. Maybe my hands will be a catalyst when i am working. I bite my fingers so it's not really different!

Won't go into Toyrific to spend money on videogames or talk to Evan or that guy that worked there for a year. Made a final decision of saving it all up for Kingdom Hearts II coming out at the end of March. Extremely popular. Note I won Elder Scrolls IV Oblivion from Catharton Electronica for reviewing Project Gotham Racing 3.

PERFECT DARK REVIEW (the first draft)

Perfect Dark Zero has to be the longest X360 game in development to date. It was revealed at Space World 2000 without in game screenshots than Rare took the project to current generation over 4 years later, but not without porting it to Xbox first. It raised from a 480i game to a 720p one. X360 is capable of 1080p after lots of work. It's not exceptional, but far from scoring a 6.9. It looks better than the most advanced Xbox game, Halo 2 or Ninja Gaiden Black, so let's leave it as that.

Joanna Dark still has short hair, but she dyes her hair red. I believe they modeled her after a real person this time around because the James Bond FMV shows a real-life woman.

The game has single player and multiplayer deathmatch arenas. Single player deathmatch is an excellent way to brush up on your skills! Enemy bots are just as deadly as the old N64 game and guaranteed to increase your skill for mission mode. Deathmatch arenas are wide open located in tropics zones with buildings to camp out (there are no hidden spaces so yeah won't be camping for long). It has everything in the game like automatic to pistols.

The AI enemies and allies are pretty good and match my skill level easily so I am not complaining about lack of challenge. I don't know what the other reviewers are saying, but this game is difficult, but not impossible.

Mission zero is a holographic matrix of the real world where Joanna saves some scientists with some help of an allied infantry. The guys in grey suits are from Dyne Corporation (bad guys). The game difficulty must be medium running out of ammo is a pesky problem.

In Mission one Joanna is suppose to be stealthy to get pass guards. With one gunshot, every bad guy will gang up on her and the only way out kill them all.

One thing I don't like about PDZ is the analogue pad's vertical controls are complete opposite of what I like it to be with no way to tweak it. The game has the controls set so up means down and down means up. Perfect Dark Classic option makes strifing opposite of regular controls. The controls are responsive, but there is no auto aim so if you've played Rare's other games without auto aim...you're above my skill level, but I don't care cos I am not you. This game builds onto a really good first person shooter on Xbox. Just not Halo great. I might have to played Xbox first person shooters to be decent at PDZ in my humble opinion.

The rooms have water effects beyond what Xbox is capable of. The lighting effects are pretty good and the enemies look shinier than normal people.

The game uses the successor of the havoc engine we've all seen in Halo and Halo 2 called the Havoc Hydracore. It is the only launch title to use Hydracore engine, but more games coming out like Sonic Team's Sonic the Hedgehog and Halo 3 are using it. The game isn't glitchy, but there is slow downs and it always runs at 30 frames per second. XBOX360 is technically able to achieve 60 fps if developers had enough time to increase the frame rate. PDZ was coming out for Xbox two years ago.

I must say after playing the Xbox 360, I can see all the jaggies in every Xbox game now. The game uses less anti-analyzing than the console should have to keep slightly above 30 fps. I heard somewhere that GoldenEye ran at a fluid 60 fps so this is a little disappointing. Advanced anti-analyzing (6x, 8x) takes lots of hardware juice. XBOX360 is clearly capable of just 4x anti-analyzing. The textures + resolution make this whole game next generation. Previous generations ran at 480i. That's not unbelievably high that it looks futuristic, but not too low that PDZ looks last generation. It still looks better than Halo 2 and them games.

PDZ uses the game's engine for all cut scenes which look like Project Snowblind cut scenes from a 3rd party developer. Speech quality is ultra clear and I played it with two stereo speakers. There is nothing American about this game. Everybody has British accents. Am positive the entire game takes place in Eastern Europe.

Rare decided to make the environments quite large and less linear than what you may typically expect. To help you, you got dynamic "waypoint arrows" appearing on the ground for a brief time leading in a right direction

At least you can cover from crossfire or a spray of enemy bullets in wide open spaces pressing the A button for cover (directly outta the Metal Gear Solid) This is a slight improvement over past fps that used crouch button to hide behind crates. Having its own cover button is small improvement to the genre. The game instantly switches to 3rd person view unless you're in the process of shooting in first person view. The game has zero camera issues.

Final Score

Graphics 8.5 – Good graphics, but 30 fps and slow down everywhere

Gameplay 8.5 – Halo kicks Joanna in the butt 5 years ago. If Halo wasn't so revolutionary I say this game plays 2000ish, but Halo is one of a kind.

Sound 8.0 – This black radio gal tells you want to do thru speech, but the problem is she sounds like any young black model. Joanna on the other hand sounds like one of those post-teenage advocate (never seen one). Background music sounds like Perfect Dark-like stereo quality soundtracks and Dolby Digital 5.1 surround sound support. Mono is obsolete and the Rare didn't settle for stereo. All audio in here has certain oomph to it.

Replay Value ? – No friends over so I don't know how long split screen fun will last. It has a nice Co-op mission mode for friends (directly out of Halo).

Conclusion 8.8 (not on average) – On average for silly game, but could've been sillier if it was 60 frames per second with auto-aim functionality. My expectations were unusually high for it keep in mind. Recommended for Xbox 360 owners who have Project Gotham Racing 3, Call of Duty 2, and Dead or Alive 4 first.

I shall ponder of something to write meanwhile.

Everything about Nintendo Revolution (2006-03-18 03:03)

copied off here

Nintendo Revolution is the current codename for Nintendo's fifth home video game console and the successor to the Nintendo GameCube. The codename refers to the console's promised "revolution" of the video-game industry. For example, the console's controller, which can detect its exact location and orientation in 3D space, is a concept never before seen in mainstream video game consoles.

The system was unveiled at Nintendo's 2005 E³ press conference and the system's game controller was revealed at the 2005 Tokyo Game Show by Nintendo President Satoru Iwata during his keynote speech in September. In an interview with Sankei Shimbun, Iwata confirmed that the Revolution will be released in North America no later than Thanksgiving 2006 (November 23). Internationally, Nintendo is considering attempting a launch with no more than 14 weeks of difference between the first and last launching regions.

Nintendo has announced that more details about the system will be made public on May 9, 2006 at their E³ 2006 Press Conference.

CPU/GPU

Nintendo has announced that IBM has finished developing the CPU, codenamed "Broadway". IBM had previously developed the processor for Nintendo's current system, the GameCube. Nintendo has also announced that Canadian graphics card maker ATI Technologies is developing the GPU, codenamed "Hollywood", for Revolution. In an interview ATI's Public Relations Manager for Consumer Products, John Swinimer, confirmed that "Hollywood" has not been developed from PC architecture but developed specifically for the Revolution 'from the ground up'.

Connectivity

The Revolution will have built-in Wi-Fi, allowing certain games to be played online via a wireless link.

The Revolution has a flip lid which can be opened to reveal 4 ports for GameCube controllers and 2 memory card slots. Additionally, again at E3 2005, Nintendo revealed that a small internal attachment (most likely a dongle) to be sold separately from the console will allow the Revolution to playback DVD movies.

Design

The Nintendo Revolution is the smallest stationary console Nintendo has ever manufactured, described by Nintendo as being "about the thickness of three standard DVD cases and only slightly longer". The console will have the ability to stand either horizontally or vertically. The front of the console features a self loading media drive which is illuminated by a blue light and will accept 12 cm Revolution game discs and 8 cm GameCube game discs.

When the console was unveiled at E3 2005 the console was colored black. However, at the Tokyo Game Show 2005 when the controller was revealed, promotional material depicted a white console. Nintendo has since revealed three additional colors (platinum, lime green, and red), but none of these colors have been confirmed as official colors.

Controller

The Nintendo Revolution controller sets aside the traditional controller seen in other mainstream consoles in an attempt to appeal to a larger audience. The controller is shaped like a television remote control and is held with one hand. Due to its symmetrical nature, the Revolution's controller is able to be used by either hand, unlike other controllers.

The controller is also able to sense motion; a sensor placed near the television allows the computer to sense the controller's position in three-dimensional space. Other sensors in the controller itself allow it to sense its tilt and yaw. This allows players to mimic actual game actions, such as swinging a sword or using a flashlight, instead of simply pushing buttons. An early marketing video showed actors miming such actions as fishing, cooking, drumming, conducting an orchestra, shooting a gun, sword fighting, performing dental surgery, and what seems to be, a game of Super Mario Bros. with one handed play.

The controller also features an expansion port on its underside which will allow various attachments to be added to the controller. Nintendo has revealed one of these attachments to be a unit which features an analog stick and 2 trigger buttons. It will connect to the main Revolution controller via a short cord, and its appearance while connected to the main controller has led it to become dubbed "The Nunchaku". Nintendo has stated the aforementioned "Nunchaku" add-on may be bundled with the Revolution console.

Nintendo has also announced a controller "shell" which will resemble a traditional game controller called the "Classic-Style Expansion Controller". The Revolution "remote" will fit inside this shell which will allow gamers to play games using a traditional controller while retaining the "remote"'s motion sensitivity. According to Satoru Iwata, it is meant for playing "the existing games, virtual console games, and multi-platform games".

Despite the controller's similarity to lightguns which are only compatible with standard-definition cathode ray tube televisions, Nintendo has stated the Revolution and its controller will be compatible with all televisions including digital projectors.

Nintendo developer Shigeru Miyamoto, before exiting the stage of Japan's 2005 Digital Interactive Entertainment Conference, stated that "there are still secrets to this controller, and these will be revealed next year."

Technical specifications

Nintendo has released very little detailed information at present concerning the technical specifications of the Revolution console. According to a recent interview with Nintendo's Jim Merrick, Nintendo may never release a complete system specification. Some details have however been released by Nintendo and other third parties involved with the console:

Processors:

- o IBM "Broadway" CPU
- o ATI "Hollywood" GPU

Memory:

- o Unknown amount of RAM
- o 512 MB built-in flash memory.

Ports and Peripherals:

- o Two USB 2.0 ports.
- o Support for wireless controllers.
- o 4 Nintendo GameCube controller ports and 2 Nintendo GameCube memory card ports (for backward compatibility).
- o Optional USB PC-compatible 802.11b (Wi-Fi) wireless attachment.

Media:

- o Slot-loading optical disc drive compatible with both 12 cm Revolution optical discs and 8.0 cm Gamecube optical discs (1.5 GB) as well as standard DVD discs.

- o 2 Front-loading SD memory card slots.

Built-in content ratings system:

- o PEGI 3+, 7+, 12+, 16+, 18+

- o ESRB EC, E, E10+, T, M, and AO.

- o CERO All Ages, 12+, 15+ 18+.

- o OFLC G, PG, M, MA15+

Networking

- o Wi-Fi by Broadcom

Video

- o MPEG4 AVC (perhaps the free X264 decoder)

- o Bink Video (free video library from Rad Game Tools)

- o commercial MPEG2 image decoder

Audio

- o Dolby AC3 (for DVD video playback)

- o Advance Audio Codec (for DVD video playback and videogame audio)

- o AD-PCM (older method of putting audio on DVD)

- o OGG Vorbis (a free library)

Backward compatibility

Nintendo has stated that Revolution will be backward compatible with all GameCube software and most peripherals. The side of the console (or top if stood vertically) is the GameCube docking station, featuring four controller ports and two memory card slots compatible with GameCube Memory Cards and the Nintendo GameCube Microphone. The Revolution's slot-loading media drive accepts 8 cm GameCube discs as well as the standard 12 cm discs such as Revolution games, DVDs, and CDs. This is uncommon in slot-loading media drives, which typically only accept discs of a single size.

Virtual Console

One of the most anticipated features of the Nintendo Revolution is its game download service, dubbed the "Virtual Console." Despite other rumors, Nintendo of America expects "Virtual Console" to be the final name of the service. Using this Virtual Console service, users will have the ability to download and play many or all Nintendo-produced NES/Famicom, SNES/Super Famicom, and N64 games for a small fee. More notably, some games may offer free retro downloads as a bonus for the purchase. Nintendo has also announced that games developed for the Sega Genesis and TurboGrafx 16 consoles will be offered via the Virtual Console download service. While not all of the Sega Genesis and TurboGrafx games will be offered, the "best of them" will be. This gives the companies a pool of over 1000 Sega Genesis games to choose from. Besides Sega and Hudson, Satoru Iwata stated that "a number of different publishers are now interested in participating in this virtual console system". Moreover, while the gameplay will be the same for all of the retro titles offered via the Virtual Console, Nintendo has stated that some of the games may be improved with sharper graphics or better framerates. In addition, gamers may be able to download games that were not originally released in their region, and some multiplayer games may be playable online, if it is technically possible. The Virtual Console service will not be used exclusively for retro games, however. Nintendo has stated that they are interested in using the service to distribute new, original content.

According to a Japanese press release, "all downloaded games will be stored on the 512 MB flash memory built into the system. To prevent illegal copying, downloaded games will feature a proprietary DRM system."

Parental controls

The Revolution will feature parental controls, prohibiting young viewers from viewing inappropriate content. This allows parents to set the age level of the system, and when a disc is inserted, it will read the content rating encoded on the game discs; if this rating is greater than the system's age level setting, the game will not load unless the user correctly enters a password to override the setting. For instance, a game carrying an ESRB rating of M for Mature, which is intended for those over the age of 17, will not play on a system that is set to only allow games rated E for Everyone (ages six and older).

This will be found in all systems released around the world; it is confirmed that the European units will use the PEGI rating system, North American units will use the ESRB rating system, units for the Japanese market will presumably use the CERO rating system, German units will use the USK system, and Australian units will use the OFLC system.

Hardware and specifications

Nintendo has hinted that not every major feature of the Revolution, and specifically its controller, has been revealed. According to Nintendo of Europe's Jim Merrick, they "have not shared everything that there is to know about Revolution or its controller."

An Ars Technica journal entry speculates that the controller may use a combination of IR and ultrasound to function, much like some existing, similar products such as "virtual whiteboards" and Nintendo's investment in Gyration, Inc. may also give a clue as to some of the technology used.

Ars Technica has also speculated that the Revolution's CPU may be based on that "Xenon" chip in the Xbox 360. Since the "Broadway" chip is being developed by IBM, it is possible that it is simply a low-cost version of the Xenon, using only one or two cores instead of the three in the current Xbox.

IGN.com claims to have received information from third-party game studios regarding the hardware specifications. Among their claims:

- o The Broadway CPU runs at 729MHz according to Nintendo specifications.
- o The Hollywood GPU runs at 243 MHz and is actually an integrated "system-on-a-chip" that includes "GPU, DSP, I/O bridge and 3MBs of texture memory."
- o The system RAM is divided into 24MB of "main" 1T-SRAM and 64MB of "external" 1T-SRAM; access speed for both banks is the same.
- o The console runs on an extension of the Gamecube Gekko CPU and Flipper GPU architectures.

Nintendo has filed a patent for a method of playing games for older less capable systems on a more capable system. It seems likely that this relates to Nintendo's 'Virtual Console'.

The Revolution will have connectivity with the Nintendo DS and the next Game Boy system. Nintendo Power magazine has said this is likely in its July 2005 issue. A reported interview with Shigeru Miyamoto seems to confirm this.

Games and developer support

Mr. Miyamoto said in an EGM interview that he is thinking of making a Pikmin game for Revolution.

NGC Magazine claims that The Legend of Zelda: Twilight Princess, when inserted into the Nintendo Revolution, will utilize its native "free-hand" controller. This claim gained further support after Nintendo of Europe's interview with Shigeru Miyamoto, in which he stated, "...because Revolution can run GameCube software, when you play Twilight Princess on Revolution you can take advantage of the Revolution controller."

It has also been hinted that older games such as Kid Icarus will be on the Revolution as well.

There is said to be 20 or so games ready for the launch of the Revolution

Forerunner confirmed | Xbox Portable confirmed (2006-03-23 09:17)

X

The April 2k6 issue of Game Informer had an article on Bungie's new Forerunner game. Forerunner takes place in the Halo Universe on Halo Delta (speculation) in the beginning. At the end of Halo 2 the Covenant Elites (Generals) were betrayed by the evil side and have allied with the fictional United Nations Space Command. The theme of this game appears to be about the ancient Forerunner's ark who built the 7 ringworlds. There were eight in Halo Combat Evolved, but Halo Alpha was destroyed. Halo Delta was activated to self-destruct at the end of Halo 2, but the player stopped the count down. Forerunner it should start at Halo Delta. Forerunner plot might be Master Chief racing towards the Ark on Earth or the Moon. The Forerunners are the advanced civilization ruling the galaxy and created the Halos long before. The space age technology came from Covenant throughout the 27 years at war with them.

Elder Scrolls IV 360

Yesterday, I bought Elder Scrolls IV for Xbox 360 at Wal-mart. I didn't talk to no one there knowing they don't care (they got their own money) The #1 game for the console. Ghost Recon Advanced Warrior has better graphics, but Elder Scrolls IV is the most anticipated. It is also the first role playing game. I'll be getting GRAW next month when I can afford this awesome first person shooter. Must own next month! Metroid Prime Hunters for Dual Screen came out yesterday. I'll get it eventually. I decided not to get it now purely because I want GRAW sooner. GRAW is a first person shooter set in 2013 playing an army recognizance known as Ghosts taking place in Mexico City. It stands in for Forerunner.

Xbox Portable

I saw Microsoft's plans for Xbox Portable on IGN.com. Thought it was neat, but then thinking it wasn't a necessity. I love consoles more than handhelds. I buy a Nintendo DS game every 3 months. Microsoft should use a SD media card (like Nintendo DS) in the XBP so it doesn't have a battery problem. SD Cards will be 4 GB in 2009 when Xbox Portable comes out. It's stupid to pay lots of money for handhelds.

Saving up for Playstation 3

This year I'll try to get a Playstation 3 with 60 GB hard drive myself by preordering. If this isn't possible, I'll add Athlon 64 X4 with socket 940 Nforce4 mobo to the Christmas list. Then I'll pay Digital Garage to install it. I have an extra Biostar Nforce4 socket 940 mobo in my room left over when my PC wasn't fried. I've gotten away with it on Xbox 360 two months ago and got gaming PC of my dreams. Planning to have $400 saved up before Thanksgiving. It'd help if I get money for my birthday which will help buy it. Whatever has the best score, I'll buy first. No ones helping me. Purely a enthusiast hobby.

Upgraded Random Access Memory

Also today I updated the Hellcat with an additional dual channel 1024 MB PC3200 because another gig of memory would make it faster despite the PC3200 and I suppose my theory was right. It was FREE!

What do I need a four core Athlon 64 for?

1. Better multitasking.
2. Faster audio compressing
3. Faster 64-bit Windows XP user interface
4. To have the fastest consumer CPU on the planet for 2 months period
5. Because I like computers and I want to show off the performance increase Windows Vista Pro is retailing in January 2007. The beta of last month is 5.3.0860. Windows XP is 5.1.2600 when it came out in 2001. For me dual booting it with WinXP makes sense. I don't want to abandon WinXP if I can't run older games on Vista. I don't hate WinXP that much.

My Doom 3 for Xbox review

Okay, the latest game I am playing is the Xbox version of Doom 3. The difference between Xbox and PC (I own that too) is the graphics. Although you can tell it's Xbox running on 733 MHz Pentium 3 with 128 MiB Geforce3 instead of an Athlon 64 X2 4800 with 256 MiB Geforce (7 series) 7800 GTX overclocked. It matters little because you got the joysticks. Doom 3 uses the control system that made the first practical first person shooter for console, Goldeneye 007 on N64, an absolute delight to play in it's glory years. You trade the Z button for R trigger and the L trigger is for throwing grenades.

Course, everyone knows the game takes place in Hell! That's true. It does take place in Hell. Go got your flame spitting skulls, grim reapers, pretty intelligent zombies, and that kind of stuff you find in 1982 version of The Thing starring Kurt Russell.

On to the game play. It is 22nd century at least when there are space marines. Since the main character's name is Butch who sounds American...I'm betting he is an US space marine. Heck the "Sarge" is American. This game is very pro-American.

Now for the lunar first person shooter. The fact this game has next generation graphics (on PC) ported down to a current generation console with not too shabby first person shooter game play. Doom 3 is better than Doom 2. The most effective weapon in Doom 3 is the chainsaw. The chainsaw is an unmatched melee weapon in Doom 3. If you find a chainsaw, you're very well off in this game. It is what makes Doom....Doom. Butch is right handed.

The game hasn't gotten boring unless you're great at it and play the novice level which I admit is geared towards for casual gamers almost like myself. The fact that a casual gamer can play Doom 3 is there. My parents don't play videogames. There is veteran which is basically Doom 3 on notice level, but damage is much more and it takes more gun shots to drop an enemy.

After Half-life 2, Halo 2, Doom 3 is easily the 3rd best looking first person shooter on Xbox. It looks better than Halo because the engine isn't build as a launch title. It was a proven concrete PC game. iD Software had lots of practice before down porting it to Xbox. A very professional port I must say.

The sound is lossy compressed, but is excellent quality codec wise. The game isn't even supported by Pro Logic 2 or Dolby Digital and it sounds great. The grown and moans sound above average. The voice actors have been practicing their lines for sure! Highest quality moans in a videogame. The whole game is voice acted. Butch constantly get shortwave band messages over his shortwave radio. All the radio messages are understood well by any high school student. This game is definitely for young and old regardless of IQ. The directions are straight forward with some miscellaneous taunts to make it feel so adult-like. You got swearing taunting too making it feel kind of realistic. The whole game is obviously borrowing of the USMC recruits way of life.

Sometimes you have to save human survivors from undead creatures. If you save him....you'll get an reward (like unlocked doors).

On a personal note. I looked at gamefaqs's Doom 3 codes and got every locker number pad combo in the game because I don't have time for messing around. Times a wasting!

The game does get harder. Butch faces enemies hidden in the shadows so mind myself not to be very careless with ammo. It uses Resident Evil's famous dodge the undead feature because you'll eventually run out of ammo and you better have some place to run before zombies eat yeah alive! That's what the lockers are for...for some cushion because no body's perfect and tend to waste a little more ammo than a veteran would. I am not perfect. Return to Castle Wolfenstein is also for Xbox, and it plays somewhat nicer. Game play has definitely an edge over the PC game with WASD, CTRL, C, spacebar and mouse. Same PC control setup done since Doom. The analog pad is nicer. I am no longer a hardcore PC gamer. I shifted from PC to console in the last 2 yrs. Most gamers admit they've done the exact same. PC games aren't as much fun anymore.

Revolution is Nintendo Go? (2006-03-24 03:59)

I found this off a Nintendo forum. Seems to be the real name of Revolution.

X

I think it spins. Do you like the logo, and "NGO" abbreviation? I liked "Nintendo Revolution" better. I wanted to call it the "Rev". I found out that "go" is the Japanese word for "five" and the N5 was one of the names forum users called it.

New tech specs

The Broadway CPU runs at 729MHz according to Nintendo specifications

The Hollywood GPU runs at 243 MHz and is actually an integrated "system-on-a-chip" that includes "GPU, DSP, I/O bridge and 3MBs of texture memory"

The system RAM is divided into 24MB of "main" 1T-SRAM and 64MB of "external" 1T-SRAM; access speed for both banks is the same.

Hi, I've enjoyed visiting your blog. I am trying to get my zen mp3 players site up and running. At the moment I am concentrating on the Zen Touch and Zen Sleek. Sadly, the Zen micro does not appear to still be available from Creative.

I've certainly got some way to go before that site meets the standards of your blog.

Found a MPEG4 AVC encoder (like Blu-ray and HD-DVD video) (2006-03-26 12:56)

X264 Encoder that plugs into everything (doesn't require NETFRAME 1.1)

MPEG4 AVC is suppose to be better then DivX resulting with much improved picture at the same filesize! It's called X264 and VideoLAN decodes it.

DivX is based on stolen Microsoft H263 codec.

X264 is based on H264 speculation

Download (edit: added most recent build) <http://mirror01.x264.nl/x264/force.php?file=./revision486/x264-486-install.exe> directory: <http://mirror01.x264.nl/x264/>

It plugs into all video converting tools including movie makers, (MPEG - AVI) converters and stuff.

I downloaded RealAnime 4 video converting tool with X264 (March 2, 2006 build) and AACplus encoders. If you've decided to use RealAnime maybe update the X264.exe file in C:\Program Files\RealAnime 4\bin directory by seeing <http://mirror01.x264.nl/>

The first movie I want to encode in X264 is War of the Worlds. My x264 copy will be 1188 kbps at 640x480. The movie will probably look really good. MPEG4 AVC is what Blu-ray and HD-DVD will use for video.

Wikipedia on DVD-9 soon (2006-03-31 16:09)

Wikipedia (the GNU encyclopedia) is in the process of making it's first DVD. This has everything on their servers, but it's not released yet. Will be at least 8.3 GB data /w some jpeg, pngs, and php files.

Some of the PNGs downsized to JPEG thumbnails get really big. 40k for a tiny thumbnail! That's because the jpeg encoder on wikipedia has awful compression. The only way it's not awful is when it's resizing jpeg images. People on there only care about pixel size. The images are normally slightly bigger then what a thumbnail should be.

I downloaded Suse Linux 10.1 beta 8, but the installation froze at the beginning of Disc 2 on my Hellcat forcing me to stay with Suse Linux 10.0 instead. The CDs have the bleeding edge open source software including the latest Linux kernel (OS engine), KDE 3.5.1 (user interface), and any March 2k6 software available. Something was up (wrong) with the helix engine in amaroK 1.3 and it didn't play music at all. The pro helix engine is messed up and I don't know how to install Gstreamer! Fortunately that's the only thing wrong with Suse 10.0. The 32-bit OSS edition may work okay. I also downloaded Ark Linux CD with KDE 3.5.1 and 2.6.17 kernel.

I can't ignore Square-Enix even if I tried. That's like ignoring Microsoft.

PS2 games I might buy (tight budget)

- Atelier Iris 2

- Kingdom Hearts 2

I wonder if my only friend Randy will make it over tomorrow so I can have a player 2. I would like a girlfriend, but I won't go searching for one. Way too interested in the internet, videogames, and myself.

Oh yeah, and I watched the Bridge Too Far DVD shortly after it was on American Movie Classics channel because I wanted to see a war movie. All was good

Played Metroid Prime Hunters and Elder Scrolls IV | catagorized computers from worst to best (2006-04-04 12:03)

Friday, I purchased Metroid Prime Hunters at Wal-Mart because I like Samus Aran. I've played this first person shooter (Nintendo's very first one) and Nintendo done great with the graphics. I took the stylist in the right hand and held the DS while strifing with my left hand. The stylist feels like a mouse cursor driven by a pen. I don't go as far back to Metroid although I have Metroid Zero Mission for GBA and have Metroid unlocked in Metroid Prime. I like oldschool games which is why I decided to support Nintendo and GBA. I'd use my Gameboy Player for Zero Mission because I can enjoy it on my 25" LCD TV if I ever complete MP Hunters! Frame Rate is really smooth, no noticeable gfx glitches, but I constantly loose the grip with my left hand so I have to hold it at the perfect angle. The music is near CD quality having professional remixes of Super Metroid music. The game fits on a 256 MB (1 Gigabit) SDcard. This online multiplayer deathmatch aspect will never be played online.

I tried out some more Elder Scrolls IV by playing it roaming around collecting money. I am a barbarian got a long sword in the sewer so I could level up to the point of killing an Imperial guard so I could loot him for his plated armor and not be seen. He is too skillful for my primitive character level. The draw rate is just as amazing as the PC version of Elder Scrolls III Morrowind. I am on level 2 and I got some swords from the sewer and I ready to fit animals. In Morrowind, if I jumped and looted at the same time, my chances of being seen were minimal. It's a glitch I read about in a FAQ. This cheat may or may not work in Elder Scrolls IV. The game is great. There is plenty to do. The replay value is immeasurable!

Last week I purchased the other best game for Xbox 360....G.R.A.W. Note that the Xbox, Gamecube, and PS2 versions are all mediocre. I was smart enough to stay away from them. There are many graphical glitches, bad generic textures, robotic movement, poor ally or enemy AI making these them all uninteresting. As you might know this is a tactical first person shooter (ie Battlefield 2.)

I am looking forward to that aircraft simulation Ace Combat Zero: The Belkin War for PS2. Some ways I'd rather have it then Kingdom Hearts II. I haven't played Ace Combat 5 since it came out last year which doesn't bother me because I will still buy Ace Combat Zero when it comes out on the last week of April. I save $10. That's a long time to not spend money I know. I'm sure it plays better then Ace Combat 5. The graphics look amazing for PS2 which is dated. And believe it or not there isn't nothing for current generation I don't already have that I want.

Here is what I believe is the worst to best computer list. All I remember is Sega Dreamcast ran on the Sega Naomi with Hitachi SuperH 4 128-bit RISC clocking at 206 MHz and Sega Saturn ran on two 32-bit Hitachi SuperHs and a 32-bit SuperH 2.

PS2 Emulation! (2006-04-08 18:13)

Yesterday, I went into Game Quest and asked this black guy (working there for 2 yrs) to give me Kingdom Hearts II...the most popular game right now. People like Final Fantasy so they're treating KH II as any Final Fantasy game. And I finally got to emulate the rendered cut screen of Final Fantasy X with PCSX2 at 9 fps. It's not in playable form until 686/786 CPUs are 11 times more powerful than The Emotion Engine. The latest version 0.9 (major release) was on the internet for 4 days.

Download PCSX2 0.9

PS2 NTSC BIOS (put into BIOS Directory)

PSX NTSC BIOS (put into BIOS Directory)

So far PCSX2 0.9 runs:

Final Fantasy X

Final Fantasy X2

Ridge Racer 5

And I learned that you can dump PS2 game images onto a 200 GB hard drive with HDAdvance 3.0 using a PS2 network adapter while at Game Quest in River Falls, WI. It caches loading times instantly so no loading times are existent. This is supposedly illegal to have because PS2 isn't meant to be played that way. Sony knows about this because they're doing a download service for PS and PS2 games the same way. I am sure this makes the experience better, but I am not doing it.

Today, I decided to stay home read how Sony Computer Entertainment may or may not go bankrupted eventually after bank reserves costing them $850 to manufacture each PS3. One site quotes, "PS3 production pricing at this point has been laid out to be anywhere from $850 - $956 per unit, meaning there will be a loss on each machine of approx $250 - $350 per console sold. If one million consoles sell in the first day of availability Sony will have wiped their entire financial gain for all of 2005 in under 24 hours."

Ian's Smashing Good Blog Site (2006-04-14 09:35:00)

Yeah, the god damn niger gave me Kingdom Hearts. LOL.....

Come on I was being non-racist. He was different and pirates videogames. Yeah, I don't relate well to pirates.

Watched Jonny Quest (2006-04-14 09:20)

Randy, I really miss you. You were my friend since BSA in 6th grade. Now, on Good Friday, you didn't call back. I am only able to play Atelier Iris Eternal Mana. I am approx at the beginning. I learned that you can get free elements by smashing it with a alchemist mace. It's a high res 2D RPGs with 2.5D backgrounds. The story line is okay. The anime inspired vector art is cute. It's a story line an average 14 yr old would think is cool. I gave this game a chance because it's there even if there are much better games.

Yesterday, I decided to watch 1965 Jonny Quest episodes I have on VHS. It's true you got Jonny, the protagonist, Race, the ex-CIA agent, Dr. Quest, the brilliant scientist, Hadji, the adopted Indian, and Bandit the family bulldog in exotic Cold War era locations. I watched 8 or 9 episodes before stopped playing it. The VHSs is old enough that it gets off track at moments (air pockets most likely). I taped this before it aired on Boomerang during the 3 day marathon sometime in 1996.

There is a 26 episode DVD box set of Jonny Quest for $29.99. It's even digitally remastered, much better than low-res VHS. I am undecided if I want it because it's sort of waste. It got good reviews at Amazon.com. 1964 is suppose to be the best. I taped all these episodes on three blank VHS tapes on lowest quality. My favorite must've been "The Robot Spy" Quite interesting.

1964 - 1965

1. "Mystery of the Lizard Men"
2. "Arctic Splashdown"
3. "The Curse of Anubis"
4. "Pursuit of the Po-Ho"
5. "Riddle of the Gold"
6. "Treasure of the Temple"
7. "Calcutta Adventure" (origin of Hadji)
8. "The Robot Spy"
9. "Double Danger" (first episode produced)
10. "Shadow of the Condor"
11. "Skull and Double Crossbones"
12. "The Dreadful Doll"
13. "A Small Matter of Pygmies"
14. "Dragons of Ashida"
15. "Turu the Terrible"
16. "The Fraudulent Volcano"
17. "Werewolf of the Timberland"
18. "Pirates from Below"
19. "Attack of the Tree People"
20. "The Invisible Monster"
21. "The Devil's Tower"
22. "The Quetong Missile Mystery" (title card shows 'The "Q" Missile Mystery' for the 1964-65 season's re-run of this episode)
23. "House of Seven Gargoyles"
24. "Terror Island"
25. "Monster in the Monastery"
26. "The Sea Haunt"

1986

1. "Aliens Among Us"
2. "Deadly Junket"
3. "Forty Fathoms Into Yesterday"
4. "Vikong Lives"
5. "The Scourge of Skyborg"

6. "Monolith Man"
 7. "Peril of the Reptilian"
 8. "Nightmares of Steel"
 9. "Skullduggery"
 10. "Temple of Gloom"
 11. "Creeping Unknown"
 12. "Secret of the Clay Warriors"
 13. "Warlord of the Sky"

X360 (2006-04-14 18:02)

The Xbox 360, known during development as the Xenon, Xbox 2 or the Xbox Next, is the successor to Microsoft's original Xbox video game console. The Xbox 360 console was officially unveiled on MTV on May 12, 2005, with detailed launch and game information divulged later that month at the prominent Electronic Entertainment Expo. Upon its release on November 22, 2005 in North America, December 2 in Europe, and December 10 in Japan, the Xbox 360 became the first console to have a simultaneous launch across the four major regions. It also serves as the first entrant in a new generation of game consoles and will compete against the forthcoming PlayStation 3 and Nintendo Revolution.

Microsoft's current retail strategy involves two different configurations of the Xbox 360 in most countries: the Xbox 360 SKU, frequently referred to as the "Xbox 360 Premium Package"; and an Xbox 360 Core System SKU. The Core System is not available in Japan, instead Microsoft offers a package identical to the Xbox 360 SKU for ¥37,900. Japanese pricing of the console has drawn some criticism, as customers there are able to purchase the Xbox 360 full package, albeit one region-coded for Japan, for a lower price than in other countries. Additionally in Australia and New Zealand the Xbox-Live Headset in the Xbox 360 "Premium Package" is replaced with the Universal Media Remote.

BusinessWeek magazine compiled a report that estimates the total cost of components in the "premium" bundle at $525 USD, sans manufacturing costs, meaning that Microsoft is losing money on every Xbox 360 system sold. It should be noted that the strategy of selling a console at a loss or near-loss is common in the console games industry, as console makers can usually expect to make up the loss through game licensing. Furthermore, since Microsoft owns the intellectual property rights to the hardware used in the Xbox 360, they can easily switch to new fabrication processes or change suppliers in the future in order to reduce manufacturing costs. This flexibility stands in contrast to the situation faced with the original Xbox, which contained a processor from Intel (a slightly modified Pentium III) and a GPU from NVidia (a modified GeForce 3), both of which were proprietary processors sold to Microsoft at an inflated market price. Because of the added expense of these chips and the inclusion of a hard drive component, Microsoft was never able to reduce Xbox manufacturing costs below the break-even point. As a result Microsoft's home entertainment division posted a loss through nearly every quarter of the console's lifecycle. Microsoft is predicting that with the Xbox 360 a greater market share and falling hardware costs will eventually make system sales profitable.

The Xbox 360 was released on November 22, 2005 in United States, Canada and Puerto Rico, December 2, 2005 in Europe, December 10, 2005 in Japan, February 2, 2006 in Mexico and Colombia, February 24, 2006 in South Korea, March 16, 2006 in Hong Kong, Singapore, and Taiwan and March 23 in Australia and New Zealand after a 3-week delay.

Because of a manufacturing bottleneck Microsoft was not able to supply enough systems to meet consumer demand in Europe or the United States. Many potential customers were not able to procure a console at launch and the dearth of availability led to Xbox 360 bundles selling on eBay at grossly inflated prices. By year's end Microsoft had sold only 1.5 million units; including 900,000 in North America, 500,000 in Europe, and a meager 100,000 in Japan. Low Japanese sales are partly attributed to the poor selection of launch titles in the region - only six games were initially offered and eagerly anticipated titles like Dead or Alive 4 and Enchant Arm were not released until several weeks after launch.

Controllers

Up to four controllers are supported by the Xbox 360, including wired and wireless gamepads. The wired gamepads may be connected to any of the three USB ports located on the console, or to a USB hub. A USB keyboard is also supported, but only for inputting text.

Gamepad

The Xbox 360 gamepad design is similar to the Type-S gamepad from the original Xbox. Unlike the Type-S, the Xbox 360 gamepad features only two analog (pressure sensitive) buttons - the left and right triggers. Also the black and white buttons have been replaced with the right and left bumpers and an Xbox Guide button has been added to the center. Wired gamepads feature a nine foot (2.74 m) long cord with a break-away feature. They can be used with any USB and Windows equipped computer. Wireless gamepads have a range of about 30 feet (9 m) and use either two AA batteries or a NiMH rechargeable battery pack. When a gamepad is plugged in, or - in the case of wireless gamepads - turned on, a quadrant of the LED "Ring of Light" around the power button is lit up, indicating connection and ordering (1st player corresponds to the upper-left quadrant, 2nd player to upper-right, etc.) The "Ring of Light" also adorns the Xbox Guide button; it will flash in case of a low battery warning on the wireless gamepad.

Xbox 360 faceplates

The default white faceplate can be replaced with a range of custom designs, each to be sold separately. Microsoft has also distributed two promotional faceplates, one for those present at the E3 2005 unveiling and one for VIP X05 attendees. The prices of these custom designs are around $20 with more to be released by third party manufacturers.

AV connection

Adapters and cables are available for TOSLINK, RCA (audio and video), S-video, Component video, VGA, D-Terminal, and SCART connections, depending on regional standard.

Other

Detachable hard drive: An optional detachable SATA 20 GB hard drive is used for the storage of games, music, downloaded trailers, levels, demos, player preferences, and community-created content from Xbox Live Marketplace; it may also be used to transfer such content between Xbox 360 units. It will also be used for backward compatibility with original Xbox games. Only 13 GB of this hard drive are available to the user; the rest is reserved for the system and games. According to J Allard, the chief of Microsoft's Xbox division, Microsoft may sell larger capacity detachable hard drives for the Xbox 360 in the future, and territories outside of North America may have a differently sized hard drive in the retail unit.

Rechargeable battery pack: This nickel metal hydride battery pack provides up to 30 hours of continuous gaming for the wireless controller. It is recommended in place of disposable AA batteries (which differ slightly in voltage). It also ships as part of the Play & Charge Kit.

Play and Charge kit: allows the controller to be recharged while "playing" by plugging the wireless controller into one of the USB ports used by wired controllers. Also includes the rechargeable battery pack.

Memory Unit: a portable 64MB device which allows the transfer of saved games, in-game achievements and unique gamer profiles to other Xbox 360 consoles.

Wireless Networking Adapter: The Wi-Fi (802.11a, 802.11b, and 802.11g) adapter is sold separately and will be sold for $100/€80/£60/C $130/¥8,925. Using an official or third-party wireless bridge the console will automatically detect and link up with other Xbox 360 consoles that are within range and form a mesh network.

Headset: allows gamers to talk to each other when plugged into the controller's expansion port and connected to Xbox Live. Some upcoming Xbox 360 titles may benefit from voice command too. It has an in-line volume control and a mute switch.

Universal Media Remote: assists in the playing of DVD movies and music (although the console can play such media without the remote), and offers controls for a TV or Windows XP Media Center Edition 2005-based PC. The universal media remote is a bigger version of the media remote that was initially shipped with the premium version of the console (which is no longer available). Both remotes allow basic control of games, along with being able to navigate the dashboard. The remote controls interface with the Xbox 360 via infra-red.

Hardware Speculations

Central processing unit

The central processing unit (CPU), named Xenon (Microsoft) or Waternoose (IBM) is a custom IBM triple-core PowerPC-based design.

90 nm process, 165 million transistors

Three symmetrical cores, each one SMT-capable and clocked at 3.2 GHz

One VMX-128 (IBM's branding for AltiVec) SIMD unit per core

128×128 register file for each VMX unit

1 MB L-2 cache (lockable by the GPU) running at half-speed (1.6 GHz) with a 256bit bus

51 gigabytes per second of L-2 memory bandwidth (256bit x 1600 MHz) dot product performance: 9.6 billion per second

115 GFLOPS theoretical peak performance

ROM storing Microsoft private encrypted keys

Graphics processing unit

The graphics processing unit (GPU) is a custom ATI "Xenos" chip. (Developed under the name "C1", sometimes "R500")

325 million transistors total

500 MHz parent GPU (90 nm process, 235 million transistors)

500 MHz 10 MB daughter embedded DRAM framebuffer (90 nm process, 90 million transistors)

o NEC designed eDRAM has internal logic for color, alpha blending, Z/stencil buffering, and anti-aliasing.

o 8 Render Output units

48-way parallel floating-point dynamically-scheduled shader pipelines

o 3 groups of 16 arithmetic logic units

o 1 ALU per fragmentpipe for vertex or pixel shader processing

o Unified shader architecture (This means that each pipeline is capable of running either pixel or vertex shaders.)

o Support for DirectX 9.0 Shader Model 3.0, limited support for future DirectX 10 shader models

o 2 Shader operations per pipe per cycle

o 96 Shader operations per cycle across the entire shader array

o Shader performance: 48 billion (48,000 million) shader operations per second (96 shader operations x 500 MHz)

o Xbox 360 GPU is capable of doing two of those shaders per cycle. If programmed for correctly, the Xbox 360 GPU is capable of 96 billion shader operations per second. Compare this with ATI's current PC add-in flagship card and the Xbox 360 more than doubles its abilities

16 Filtered & 16 unfiltered texture samples per clock

Maximum polygon performance: 500 million triangles per second

Texel fillrate: 8 gigatexel per second fillrate (16 textures x 500 MHz)

Pixel fillrate: 16 gigasamples per second fillrate using 4X multisample anti aliasing (MSAA) or 4 gigapixel per second without multisample anti aliasing (8 ROPs x 500 MHz)

Dot product operations: 24 billion per second or 33.6 billion per second theoretical maximum when summed with CPU operations

1 TFLOPS theoretical peak performance of CPU and GPU combined

Memory

512 MB 700 MHz GDDR3 (1400 MHz effective) RAM (Total system memory is shared with the GPU via the unified memory architecture.)

System bandwidth

The system bandwidth comprises:

22.4 GB/s memory interface bus bandwidth (700 MHz × 2 accesses per clock cycle (one per edge) on a 128 bit bus)

256 GB/s eDRAM internal logic to eDRAM internal memory bandwidth

32 GB/s GPU to eDRAM bandwidth (2 GHz × 2 accesses per clock cycle on a 64 bit DDR bus)

21.6 GB/s front side bus (aggregated 10.8 GB/s upstream and downstream)

1 GB/s southbridge bandwidth (aggregated 500 MB/s upstream and downstream)

Audio

All games must support at least six channel (5.1) Dolby Digital surround sound

Support for 48 kHz 16-bit audio

320 independent decompression channels

32 bit processing

256+ audio channels

No voice echo to game players on the same Xbox console; voice goes only to remote consoles

Voice communication is handled by the console, not by the game code. This allows players to communicate online even if they are playing different games.

Uses XMA codec (based on WMA Pro)

Video

All games must support a 16:9 aspect ratio, and a minimum of 720p HD resolution with 2x full-screen anti-aliasing enabled. The GPU can downsample the native 720p to lower display resolutions (including 480i SDTV and 480p) and dynamically crop or scale 16:9 to fit 4:3 screens. Some games will optionally support native 1080i and 480p video resolutions as well.

Supported codecs

VC-1 at non-HD NTSC and PAL resolutions

VC-1 or WMV will be used for streaming video

VC-1 or WMV HD supports DVD quality and high definition quality video

Bink Video is licensed for games like Project Gotham Racing 3 additional MPEG2 decoder for DVD video playback

DVD drive

A 12X DVD-ROM SATA drive, capable of reading DVD+R/DVD+RW discs and DVD-R/RW, is part of the console, with game titles shipping on single or dual-layer DVDs. Due to storage restrictions imposed by the dual layer DVD format and increased memory requirements of high resolution full motion videos and textures, future Xbox 360 games may span multiple discs. The disc drive also supports the CD-DA, CD-ROM, CD-R/RW, WMA-CD, MP3-CD, and JPEG Photo CD formats as well as DVD movies.

Bill Gates has confirmed during his keynote speech at CES 2006 that an external HD-DVD drive will be released for the 360 during 2006.[8] However, Peter Moore has stated that if HD-DVD loses the format war, Microsoft may also release an external Blu-Ray drive. According to Japan's chief of Xbox operations Yoshihiro Maruyama, Microsoft will not release Xbox 360 games in the new disc formats.

Cooling

Both the GPU and CPU of the console have heatsinks. The CPU's heatsink uses heatpipe technology, where a hollow copper pipe containing a substance with a low vaporization point transfers heat from one end to the other very efficiently. The heatsinks are actively cooled by a pair of 60mm exhaust fans that push the air out of the case (negative case pressure). Active cooling makes the Xbox 360 considerably louder than the original Xbox. There have been third party modifications that watercool the console.

Miscellaneous

The option to apply a regional lockout to games is available to publishers. Most titles do not use such restrictions, see List of Xbox 360 games without region encoding. DVD region codes are always enforced.

An external A/C adapter supplies power to the console and its connected accessories, it is the largest power supply to ever accompany a gaming console. The North American adapter is rated at 5 amps / 100-120V A/C input and has a D/C output of 203W.

3 USB 2.0 input ports, 1 RJ45 ethernet port.

With the launch of the Xbox 360, Microsoft's online gaming service, Xbox Live went through a major upgrade adding a basic non-subscription service (Silver) to its already established premium subscription-based service (Gold). Xbox Live Silver is free of charge and allows users to create a profile, join on message boards, access Microsoft's Xbox Live Arcade, and talk to other members. Silver members are not allowed to play any games online. Microsoft has also announced there will be trial weekends for Silver members to access the full features of Gold service temporarily. Xbox Live is supporting a few features, such as the headset, or an Xbox Live webcam that will come out in the Spring of 2006, according to Xbox 360 kiosk stands and Official Xbox Magazine. Xbox Live Gold has the same features as Silver plus online game playing capabilities. Microsoft has allowed for previous Xbox Live subscribers to maintain their profile information, buddy lists, and games history when they make the transition to Xbox Live Gold. To transition an Xbox Live account to the new system the user needs to link a Microsoft Passport account to their gamer tag on Xbox.com. Then when the user goes to add a Xbox Live enabled profile to their console, the user just needs to provide the console with their passport account information. An Xbox Live Gold account costs $49.99 USD, £39.99 Pounds Sterling, €59.99 per year.

Procedural synthesis

In traditional video games, all content is statically stored and generally immutable; that is, textures, meshes, and other game content is stored on a storage medium. As complexity in each rises, the demand for storage rises as well. A newer approach to generating content is utilised for Xbox 360 titles, a method referred to by Microsoft as procedural synthesis. Procedural synthesis is an approach to generating game content via algorithms. For example, trees are one of the most complicated objects to render in a game, due to their organic complexity. A game with only one model for a tree will appear odd, as nature is far more random; the game loses some of its immersion as a result. Instead, a general recursive algorithm will generate the tree's model and textures, so that each tree looks different from the next, and do so with high efficiency.

Backward compatibility

Backward compatibility is achieved through software emulation of the original Xbox hardware. Emulated games offer minor graphical enhancements because they are rendered in 720p resolution with anti-aliasing enabled rather than the Xbox standard of 480p. Some games also benefit from a subtle improvement in the rendered draw distance, possibly due to the system's greater memory bandwidth. However there are also games that do not perform well in emulation, these often exhibit a lower framerate on the Xbox 360.

A hard drive is required to enable backward compatibility. Hard drives purchased separately or as part of the console package include an early version of the emulator that includes emulation profiles for games Halo and Halo 2. Updated emulation profiles can be obtained through Xbox Live, by burning a CD with profiles downloaded from Xbox.com, or by ordering an update disc from Microsoft.

The full list of backward-compatible games is maintained at Xbox.com. Although the current U.S. list includes over 200 games, fewer titles are listed as backward compatible in European and Japanese markets. Microsoft has stated that they intend to release more emulation profiles as they become available, with a goal of making the entire Xbox library playable on the Xbox 360.

Overheating

Because of its high power consumption and limited capacity to dissipate heat, the Xbox 360 console poses a substantial risk of overheating if users do not follow the guidelines prescribed by the user manual. Users are advised not to obstruct air flow to the enclosure vents or power supply. Problems associated with overheating include reduced system performance and instability that may result in crashing or hardware failure. Some Xbox 360 owners have even installed custom cooling solutions in their consoles as a preventative measure.

Disc scratching

When a user moves the Xbox 360 from its vertical position to its horizontal position and vice-versa while the system is reading from a disc, the angular momentum of the disc causes it to brush against the drive's pickup-assembly and results in scratches. The manual that comes with the Xbox 360 specifically warns against moving the system while it is powered on. Microsoft cannot replace scratched discs, by simply replacing the media, because they do not own the rights to the games, however they do offer a free copy of a Microsoft Game Studios Xbox 360 title as a replacement for scratched disks.

Disc drive noise

Compared to previous generation game consoles the Xbox 360 is quite loud, much of this noise is produced by the disc drive when it reads a game disc. Due to the fact that games can be played both with and without the detachable hard disc the drive spins close to its maximum 12X speed to reduce load times. The drive generates less noise while reading video DVDs, audio CDs, or other non-game discs since these do not require as high of a transfer rate and are not spun as quickly (lower scanning velocity, see also constant linear velocity).

With the third, and most recent, production run of the Xbox 360, the original Hitachi DVD drive (model GDR-3120L) was replaced with a quieter Toshiba/Samsung DVD drive (model TS-H943). The Toshiba/Samsung model uses the same laser unit as the old LG/Hitachi drive, so the reading capabilities remain identical between the drives.

Actually. Tell to me, please - where I can find more information on this question?

PS3 (2006-04-22 15:51)

The PlayStation 3 (PS3) will be Sony's seventh generation era video game console in the PlayStation series. It is the successor to the PlayStation 2 and will mainly compete against the Nintendo Revolution and the Xbox 360. Sony has announced that the PS3 will be backward compatible with earlier PS1 and PS2 games. At the moment, little is known in public about the PS3 apart from its hardware specifications and the reports that it will be based on open APIs for the game development.

The PS3 was officially unveiled on May 16, 2005 by Sony during an E3 conference, where the console was first shown to the public. A functional version of the console was not at E3 or the Tokyo Game Show in September 2005, although at both events, demonstrations were held on devkits (for example Metal Gear Solid 4: Guns of the Patriots) and comparable PC hardware, and video footage based on the predicted PS3 specifications was produced (for example for Mobile Suit Gundam).

Pricing

Sony was originally aiming for a spring 2006 launch as announced at the 2005 Electronic Entertainment Expo, but Sony revealed during a press conference in Japan on March 15, 2006 that there will be a delay due to issues over the finalization of Blu-ray disc copy protection technology, and as a first for any PlayStation console, Sony is now aiming for a worldwide release in early November 2006.

Sony has not yet announced the pricing for PlayStation 3. Sony Computer Entertainment president and "father of the PlayStation" Ken Kutaragi has been quoted as saying "It'll be expensive" and "I'm aware that with all these technologies, the PS3 can't be offered at a price that's targeted towards households. I think everyone can still buy it if they wanted to" and "but we're aiming for consumers throughout the world. So we're going to have to do our best in containing the price". Ken Kutaragi believes that customers would be willing to pay extra for a superior product, as they had in the past for the original PlayStation (¥39,800 vs. ¥12,500 for the Super Famicom).

Games in development

As of March 2006, there are already over 230 PS3 games announced by multiple developers and publishers, like SCEA, Electronic Arts, Konami, Namco, Capcom, Square Enix and many others. As well as announced titles there are likely to be many 'secret projects' already under development. Since then the PS3 will be delayed until November.

Most developers have already announced games for the PS3. Some anticipated ones include Metal Gear Solid 4: Guns of the Patriots, Killzone PS3, Resident Evil 5, Devil May Cry 4, Shin Megami Tensei, Armored Core 4, Unreal Tournament 2007, Resistance: Fall of Man, Grand Theft Auto 4 (provisional title), Sonic the Hedgehog (tentative title), and Tekken 6.

At the E3 2005 Press Conference, Sony showed some pre-rendered and some real-time videos of games in development with the codenames Eyedentify, Vision Gran Turismo and MotorStorm. Also shown at E3 was a Final Fantasy VII technical demo of the opening sequence remade for the PlayStation 3 system. Square Enix stated afterwards that there isn't any plans for a remake at the moment, but it is in consideration. However, recently a magazine reported that Square would indeed remake Final Fantasy VII for the PS3.

At this time, three games have been mentioned as PS3 launch titles: Lair from Factor 5, Warhawk from Incognito Entertainment, and Unreal Tournament 2007 from Epic Games.

Backward compatibility

The PlayStation 3 will be compatible with PlayStation 2 and PlayStation. In a recent interview Ken Kutaragi stated that backward compatibility will be achieved through a combination of hardware and software.

At the PlayStation briefing on March 14, 2006 in Japan, Sony revealed that the PlayStation 3 will display legacy recoded PlayStation titles in high-definition resolutions. However, backwards capability will be limited to only games that have passed Sony's TRC (Technical Requirements Criteria). Estimates by game developers put the number of PS and PS2 titles that have passed the TRC to be around 50-85 %.

Peripherals

The PS3 will not be backward-compatible with some of the hardware peripherals of the PS2. For example, memory cards for the PlayStation and PlayStation 2 will not work on the PlayStation 3 hardware. Instead it was announced that the PS3 will use the Sony Memory Stick, and SD/MMC memory cards to save games. The Memory Sticks will be able to store saved games for both PS1 and PS2 games, unlike the PS2's memory card. However, with the announcement of a standard 60 GB HDD with the PS3, a hard drive game saving system is very likely.

Peripherals such as MaxAction for PS2, are able to transfer PS1 and PS2 saves to a PSP Memory Stick, making the saves compatible to be read from the PS3.

Online services (PNP)

To answer to Microsoft's Xbox Live, Sony has confirmed a unified online service at the 2006 PlayStation Business Briefing meeting in Tokyo. The name of the service has been given the working title "PlayStation Network Platform". Sony has confirmed that the basic online service will be free and will have sufficient functionality for online gaming. The online service is being developed jointly by Sony Computer Entertainment and Sony Online Entertainment.

According to DevStation Conference, the PS3 will use the Cross Media Bar already used in the PlayStation Portable and PSX devices. The hard disk will come pre-installed with a Linux distribution, possibly with Cell extensions developed by IBM and Sony.

Hardware specifications

According to a press release by Sony at the May 16 2005 E3 Conference, the specifications of the PlayStation 3 are as follows:

Central processing unit

3.2 GHz Cell BE multi-core processor: PowerPC-based 'Power Processing Element' and 7 Synergistic Processing Elements (SPEs). The PPE has a 512 KB L2 cache and one VMX (Altivec) vector unit. Each of the eight SPEs is a RISC processor with 128-bit 128 SIMD GPRs and superscalar functions. Each SPE has 256 KB of software-addressable SRAM. Only seven SPEs are active; the eighth is redundant, to improve yield. If one of the eight has a manufacturing defect, it is disabled without rendering the entire unit defective.

Graphics processing unit

Custom RSX or "Reality Synthesizer" design co-developed by NVIDIA and Sony:

Clocked at 550 MHz

1.8 TFLOPS

136 shader operations per clock

74.8 billion shader operations per second (100 billion with CPU)

Full high definition output (up to 1080p) x 2 channels

Multi-way programmable parallel floating point shader pipelines

128-bit pixel precision offers rendering of scenes with high dynamic range imaging

512 MB Graphics Render Memory

Sony has hinted it may also handle audio (possibly Nvidia's Soundstorm 2) PS3 Block Diagram

Memory

256 MB Rambus XDR DRAM clocked at CPU die speed (3.2 GHz)

256 MB GDDR3 VRAM clocked at 700 MHz

Theoretical system bandwidth

25.6 GB/s to Main Ram XDR DRAM: 64 bits × 3.2 GHz

22.4 GB/s to GDDR3 VRAM: 128 bits × 700 MHz × 2 accesses per clock cycle (one per edge)

RSX 20 GB/s (write), 15 GB/s (read)

SB 2.5 GB/s write and 2.5 GB/s read

204.8 GB/s Cell Element Interconnect Bus (Theoretical peak performance)

Cell FlexIO Bus: 35 GB/s outbound, 25 GB/s inbound (7 outbound and 5 inbound 1Byte wide channels operating at 5 GHz) (effective bandwidth typically 50-80 % of total)

Audio/video output

Supported screen sizes: 480i, 480p, 720p, 1080i, 1080p

Two HDMI (Type A) outputs (Dual-screen HD outputs)

S/PDIF optical output for digital audio

Multiple analog outputs (Composite, S-Video, Component video)

Sound

Dolby Digital 5.1 minimum, DTS, LPCM (DSP functionality handled by the Cell processor)

May be handled by a Soundstorm 2 embedded in the RSX link Article

Sampling Frequency: 44.1/48 kHz.

Storage

Blu-ray Disc: PlayStation 3 BD-ROM, BD-Video, BD-R, BD-RE.

DVD: PlayStation 2 DVD-ROM, DVD-Video, DVD-ROM, DVD-R, DVD-RW, DVD+R, DVD+RW

CD: PlayStation CD-ROM, PlayStation 2 CD-ROM, CD-DA, CD-DA (ROM), CD-R, CD-RW, SACD, SACD Hybrid (CD layer)

SACD HD

Hard Drive: Standard 60 GB, 2.5", detachable/upgradeable, with Linux pre-installed.

Memory Stick standard/Duo and standard/mini slots

CompactFlash Type I and II slot

SD/MMC slot

It was announced on the 14th of March 2006 that all PlayStation 3 games will ship on Blu-Ray Rom discs.

Communications

Gigabit Ethernet Hub (one IN and two OUT connections)

IEEE 802.11 b, g Wi-Fi

Bluetooth 2.0

USB 2.0 (four front and two rear ports)

Networking

SCEI's press release indicates that controller connectivity to the PlayStation 3 can be provided via:

802.11b, g Wi-Fi. Integrated for mesh networking and connectivity with the PlayStation Portable

TCP/IP networking (wired ethernet)

USB 2.0 (wired)

Bluetooth 2.0 (up to 7 controllers)

Controller

On 23 March, 2006 at the Game Developers Conference, Phil Harrison announced that the "boomerang" design has indeed been scrapped and that a new controller design will be revealed in May at E3.

Physical dimensions

32 cm (L) x 24 cm (W) x 8 cm (H)[13]

Overall floating-point capability

In a slide show at their E3 conference, Sony presented the "CPU floating point capability" of the PlayStation 3's Cell CPU, and compared it to other CPUs. In their official press release, the same statistic regarding the PS3 as a whole was reported to be 2 TFLOPS[7].

The figures are rounded estimates based on addition of the theoretical maximum floating point performances of the processing units in the Cell CPU and those of the RSX GPU. Inevitably, real-world performance for both systems will be lower. Additionally, programmers may find it difficult, initially, to optimize their game engines to make the best use of the highly parallel architectures of both systems, further reducing real-world performance.

Miscellaneous

Two simultaneous High-definition television streams for use on a title screen for a HD Blu-ray Movie.

High-definition IP video conferencing.

Arena Football (2006-04-26 09:08)

When is Arena Football Pro League coming to Minnesota? The Minnesota Vikings and Minnesota Gophers play in the Metrodome which is an 'arena'. Gophers get twice the attendance then the Vikings. Gophers don't have their own arena due to cuts in state budget. New stadium funding is unpopular with Minneapolis even if St. Paul built a state-of-the-art hockey arena. (only 15 miles a way). Minnesota fans are already seeing arena football. So MN Vikings must be an unofficial arena football team when playing home games? Will this prevent Arena Football League coming to Minnesota? Minneapolis is closer to where I live then Green Bay, Wisconsin. The Green Bay Packers sell out tickets in every game in every year meaning football is "that word again" in my state. No doubt. An arena football team could surely survive in Green Bay or Milwaukee and be popular after NFL season.

Nintendo Revolution (2006-04-27 10:27)

April 29, 2006 - Graphical calculators JPEG added to "Some Pictures"

I am probably not the first to know it's name on here, but Nintendo announced on their webpage that Wii is the Revolution. Nintendo Go was valid, but was a very, very old name. Nintendo has probably changed it because like I said before I rather call it the Rev.

Wii definately comes from WiFi and Revolution is entirely WiFi if you got a Wavebird wireless Gamecube controller. This comes after seeing Ubisoft's Red Steel First Person shooter. A xbox game with much better antianalysing.

The only thing revolutionary about the Wii is the fact Nintendo got it thru their thick brains that DVDs should be their format after failing to see this with Gamecube. It's made a laughing stock out of Gamecube. Once again the MiniDVD didn't fit enough video. Gamecube games had little video in them. Their stupid thinking of piracy resistant miniDVDs were putting them in last place. Why didn't Nintendo bring Panasonic Q to Wisconsin? Probably a bad decision on their part.

Nintendo fans once were waiting for the Nintendo 64 Disc Drive, but it ended up to be the Nintendo 64 Disk Drive. And game developers used the Doctor V64 to extract ROMs to CD using the expansion port and you could even play the ROM off CD by using it (sound familiar?). Sega saw this with Saturn and dropped support the Sega Jupiter (A cartridge-based Saturn) Saturn was too difficult to program for so the obvious choice was develop for Playstation and it was $299 instead of $399. PS2 inhirined the back catalog of Playstation games.

Elder Scrolls IV PC (2006-05-02 15:44)

I drove to Menominee, WI to see Randy, Bob, Bob's sister Jessie, and Bob's new girlfriend. She wasn't cute, but I wouldn't call her ugly. That's immature. Jessie doesn't like me. First time I've seen Bob in 8 months. Randy grilled steak, baked beans made cheesy potatoes. Nobody there wanted to talk about Linux, videogames, computers, or my music. I went home on the rainiest day of the month. I didn't like it. Bob didn't like me as much now. I wanted to go home. I almost did go home right away.

I received Elder Scrolls IV from UK in mail and have been playing it for three hours last night. I took camera shots. I don't have time to get into games anymore so I cheated. It doesn't make the game go by any faster. Game looks really pretty though. Keyboard and mouse rock! I completed 1 quest and am working on two more. I promised to help a half-ogre prince get his credibility back in the arena. Graphics are a 10/10 as far as my PC collection is concerned. It has certainly surpassed Half-life 2 in graphics quality. This is good!

Running at 1600x1200, 4x antialiasing, multisampling transparency antialiasing, 30+ frames per second, high quality image setting, and gamma correct antialiasing .

Sweet looking isn't it? I chose to be a sorceress, but she might not look like it. I can not afford a staff yet. I actually have a light infantry mail on now with steel buckler (shield).

All good things come to an end including PS2. The primary issue is getting around too actual gaming on anything. Can only spare little time towards Elder Scrolls IV.

I am not saying I'm going to support Wii, but PS3 is very expensive. I am unsure I can afford it or not. Owning PS3 would be selfish because it wouldn't be played often. I don't play any of my past overly appreciated consoles (PS, DC, N64, SNES, NES, GBA, PSP). I am just saying I'll own a PS3 eventually.

Bought Guild Wars Factions | Suse 10.1 release date announced | New SMB is good! (2006-05-06 22:51)

SuSE 10.1 release date is May 11, 2006. It's going to boot up faster and look professional doing it. Even though I can't play PC games in it....I can look great using Firefox, kopete and amarok in my stylish Software- und System-Entwicklung. No, I don't speak German....I found it just like I find many things (ps you can buy it at Best Buy...oops I said too much). I found it interesting SuSE saves files on USB mass storage devices, but not NTFS partitions without user input. The terminal command "chmod 700" doesn't change anything! I download everything in Windows so I am not bothered much. CCleaner is a very good windows registry cleaner.

- Guild Wars Factions starts at the very beginning of the first game.

One thing I learned from Guild Wars is once you join a guild, it's very hard to quit the guild in case it goes different ways. Like ESIV you can do anything you want too.

I drove to Target and bought Guild Wars Factions instantly in 5 minutes. I'll install it later coz right now I was playing Elder Scrolls IV. I think it was awesome because I own Guild Wars and played that for 2 weeks online. I'll go online and play test it and see why the reviews are right. In Elder Scrolls IV, I got to the first oblivion gate (really easy) and a knight comes up to me and said "go to jail unless you paid." I fought this knight and won, stripped him down and got all his gear. Now I look like some tough lady riding on a horse. If you attack horses, they attack you. The game has hiccups like the reviews say. It bugged me so I reduce the resolution to 1280x1024 because the monitor is downing the signal. Another way to do it is keep the resolution at 1600x1200 and turn off any anti-aliasing. The results would be the same. There is so many polygons on screen that ESIV looks antialiased. The oblivion gate makes the Emperor's knights go nuts and they attack me. I could run away until it wears off. The game is cool, I just think it makes everything obsolete by comparison. Personal opinion

Not surprising my next videogame is going to be New Super Mario Bros. It's like a 2D sequel to Super Mario World (retro maybe, but IGN gave gameplay a 10/10 calling it revolutionary.) I'll have to decide that for myself. NSMB is coming out next week.

Wii Analog Controller | Super Mario Galaxy | Dual Shock 2 design succure (2006-05-10 00:35)

I saw the Wii's analog controller today and thought this is fine..can't get excited though. I can't stop what Nintendo does. A crossbreed between SNES and Playstation controllers! This thing is real! This doesn't make me want a Wii, but it's suprisenly similar to dual shock 2. This doesn't mean Wii is better then PS3 at all. It just means Nintendo knows it needs an analog controller for 3rd party ports not compliant with the Wiimote.

PS3 uses dual-shock 2 - best idea they had all year!

Sony was clever staying with the dual shock 2 design. It's their trademark. They're adding a tilt technology giving the dual shock 3 tilt features. I would buy it for the controller and games like Resistance: Fall of Man, Metal Gear Solid 4 Guns of the Patriot, and Final Fantasy XIII. I don't know how I can live without the dual shock 2 controller. Must find a job to pay for PS3!

Latest Linux build comes to the PS3

PS3 is going to come with K Desktop Environment build 3.5.2 on a 20 gigabyte hard drive for $499.99 USD. PS2 Linux had KDE 1.2 and it was primitive. As if Linux wasn't excellent already? Linux should be dual booted with everyone's computer.

Super Mario Galaxy: In development since 2000.

You know I played Super Mario Sunshine and let me tell you it has okay game play with all the jumping, punching, squirting Mario does, but it was one of them play once thru games from start to finish. I am unsure about this Super Mario Galaxy (code named Super Mario 128). Looks too childish, but this was always true for 3D platform games....Nintendo couldn't put a dash of adult comedy in it we've seen with Conker's Bad Fur Day you know.

Graphics of this game are alright. High resolution like Sunshine, but with more advanced lighting effects I suppose we all expected post Gamecube. Galaxy looks like Mario out of the Super Smash Bros. Melee FMV.

Installed Suse 10.1 | Firefox /w Vista? (2006-05-19 19:12)

Rumor has it Microsoft will include Mozilla Firefox (the program you're using anyways) /w their next Windows Vista to avoid the IE 7 monopoly issue and avoid splitting the company due to it's monopoly with web browsers. Next thing you know is they're going to add open source video (Xvid, X264) audio (ogg, aac) codec to Windows Media Player 12! I downloaded 32-bit and 64-bit OpenSuse 10.1 CDs (completely legally) last Wednesday. The 32-bit ones installed a-ok. The hellcat won't mount CD2 so I am downloading the DVD today. It booted up in 35 seconds on my Athlon XP PC compared to 1 minute on Suse 10.0 on the same PC. OpenOffice 2.02 uses less memory (same multitasking) then Suse 10. Now better suited for multitasking as good as Windows XP.

I went to Game Stop, Woodbury, Minnesota and added New Super Mario Bros. and Suikoden V to my game collection. Someone there really liked New Super Mario Bros and gave me two thumbs up literally when i asked. Course, thought of asking when PS3 preordering starts. The store clerk couldn't tell me. Yes, I drove all the way into Woodbury with urban traffic (last time I gone into a urban area was 1 month ago) listening to 93X (93.7 FM) there and back. Got 6 hrs gaming in the last 5 days....playing very casual. Ma ybe I am sick....i should play more.

Did I mention I am going on a electronica strike? I am for the sake of keeping friends. Wouldn't want to scare anyone with Sasha - Xpander or Chicane or The Thrillseekers. Maybe the future is southern rock? I am going sobber. I could've had it right the first time by listening to country. I hate rap and hip-hop.

Emulating MS Windows! (2006-05-23 10:30)

Qemu (also does Knoppix 4) running ReAct OS 0.29 /w Irfanview and 7zip on my desktop. This is cool! ReAct OS is open source (free). I don't trust it enough to give it a partition of it's own.

I talked abotu this before a number of times.

If you want my professional opinion....stay with Windows XP. ReAct OS doesn't run anything complicated yet.

M2i Heliodisplay is a floating touch screen (2006-05-27 12:19)

IO2 Technology has unveiled a different take on displays for your PC or other video source. The M2i is a Heliodisplay multimedia projector. In plain language, that means that the display floats in the air. It's interactive, too, so virtual cursor controls allow the display to act as a virtual touch screen. The display is projected at 4:3 or 16:9, and can be as big as 30" at 4:3. The M2i is designed so that it can be hidden out of view, so only the images can be viewed. The projection source brightness is 1600 lumens, and can be boosted to 2200 lumens with a high resolution package.

The M2i is targeted for use at trade shows or in night clubs or museums. They are both eye catching and versatile since they don't need a background to be projected against. IO2 makes it clear that it is not a holographic display, though. The projector weighs 34.5 lbs, so it isn't particularly portable.

Playing F.E.A.R this time on my SysteMax Hellcat. Gamma correct antianalysing is off which is why the screenies are so dark!.

Goriest PC game ever! That's right. I'm not scared....lol....wait, ayup i'm scared to the point i stop wearing earphones half the time. This game and The Grudge have close ties. First Person shooters at it's best!

Did I mention PC games are on a decline? I'm pretty updated game wise...although consoles are suppose be better for some reason. Game Informer issue had an article about PC gaming declining. I refuse to believe it. They're lying! PC gaming is at it's height of popularity in 2006!

Randy didn't come over! I'm out of cash because i spent it on a Sega Dreamcast and Mega Man X Collection. Next month I believe I'll buy a brand new Xbox in case my current one dies.

8.6 JuneGot 2Gigs of PC5400 (2006-06-03 08:52)

Today, I got 2x one gig dual channel DIMMs (OCZ high performance PC5400) in the mail and stuck them into my Systemax Hellcat taking out the 1 GB DDR DIMMs. DDR2 isn't compatible with DDR. It's similar to the speedy execution of 2D programs on my Dell Dimension XPS (has 2048 MB) only faster no matter the CPU load (1 – 3 seconds). My dad gave them to me for picking out his glasses claiming my taste is better. More then enough memory to do 8x anti-aliasing. It was my choice.

I got 480 gigs of hard drive space, and my GPU doesn't need updating. I still play such games on PS2 which is really, really old showing I don't care about HD gfx, but I do still owning two PS2s. I understand Xbox 360 has three cores that it actually uses while with PC there is barely dual core support in anything.

Life sucks....am by myself all the time. Randy didn't come over neither. He got his girlfriend...he likes girls. Bob likes girls too. Neither of them are available. I got an interview for a job in Woodbury, MN. I think it's too far, but they are excited to talk to me.

Found Firefox 2.0 (2006-06-09 08:12)

I just found out Firefox 2.0 is out so downloaded Firefox 2.0 alpha 3 looking great, found the spellchecker very useful. FF2a3 hasn't crashed yet. I went to MySpace and it didn't crash...a good thing. I can't think of anywhere else a browser would crash. Also I downloaded IE 7 beta 2 so I could compare the two. I have both opened at the same time trying to decide which is better. Webpages load just as fast on FF as IE6. Guessing it's still Firefox. MS said on their webpage that "we heard you![....like Firefox]". Wikipedia has a graph showing how much of each continent is using Firefox which is less than IE by far. North America has 3rd highest user ratio after Europe and Australia

Today, I go sample the lifestyles of the not so rich and famous at Minnesota Life College's dorms and people living there. They'll ask me many questions so may give an answer because it's a great place. There are 150 other subscribers and I don't know their selection system at all. It most not be based on location...I know this much. For the sake of making it...I can't speak more about it, sorry. Perhaps another time

I have an interview with a company doing computer operator intern at the Hartford building in Woodbury (behind Circuit City facing I-94) doing computer job training for loading reel and cartridge tape drives. They expect me to work full time. They gave me a 20 page overview to read over.

To keep me company, I read 2 reviews each of 6 videogames from Gamerankings.com. Something to pass the time. Then I got onto the Xbox and killed 100 bots in Unreal Championship 2 for Xbox. Decided to hold off buying an Xbox until it completely dies. I have computer hardware expenses. The game has stellar graphics on Xbox. I mean improved over Unreal Championship. Textures are better without framerate drop. As in all first person shooters game play is intense.

I can't buy a brand new Xbox this month because I am budgeting my income. I have to pay a family member for something costing $200 who says I can pay him over 2 months! I also was eyeing that Half-life 2 Episode 1 expansion. I am interested in Panzer Dragoon Saga off Ebay because it's rare collectable for Saturn fans. It came out after Saturn officially died in America so it is a collectable worth $110. I remember Sega Saturn games at Wal-Mart, but slightly distorted .

This is Ian signing off.

Hey there, a google search for Brian G's "Monochromatic (Black)" led me to this post. I've been trying to find this desperately for ages. Is there any way you could upload it to Megaupload or Rapidshare or similar? It would be very much appreciated.

Where can I find the full length version of Escape N2 Trance - First and Follow ?

Anonymous (2013-05-31 16:04:26)

Very descriptive post, I enjoyed that a lot. Will there be a part 2?

Look at my web page ... handjob-teens.com

Hmm it appears like your site ate my first comment (it was super long) so I guess I'll just sum it up what I wrote and say, I'm thoroughly enjoying your blog.

I too am an aspiring blog blogger but I'm still new to everything. Do you have any tips for rookie blog writers? I'd definitely appreciate it.

An impressive share! I have just forwarded this onto a colleague who had been doing a little research on this. And he in fact bought me breakfast simply because I found it for him...

lol. So allow me to reword this.... Thanks for the meal!!

But yeah, thanks for spending the time to discuss this topic here on your blog.

Hi Ian...

I have noticed that you have two tracks with M.C.T.R. posted on your "Trance Part 2".

I have been searching for those in a long time.

Would you be able to e-mail me these two tracks? Or, preferably, the track "Hard Times"?

I would appreciate it a lot.

Thanks,

Morten

Where did you get Zilent Zpott and Audioplacid - Ondas Silenciosas (moon mix)? I can't find this track anywhere, no online stores or free downloads like other tunes by Audioplacid. It's still played on di.fm...

TECH: Saw inside Hartford Building (2006-06-15 20:06)

I went inside the Hartford building with a dress shirt, pants and shoes (wore formally first time in years). Inside is this state-of-the-art building with big glass windows, and a operator setting at a desk. She asked me to stare at the webcam to take my photo id or security will throw me out. John (boss) gave me and Pam (from job center) a tour of the Hartford building making my way up the stairs into some employee cubicle room where people look somewhat computer illiterate although they have PCs at every desk.

the server room

We went into his office and talked about what I like, I told him about WITC, what I had no experience with, he saw my resume (and liked it) and list I made. I asked him about multimode fiber, what super computer they have?, what a tape drive looked like?.

Then John punches key buttons to access the super computer and server room. There are a couple Windows workstations with analyzing software called the command center. You step in a sticky mat to get static off your shoes. To the left was the command center having 5 PCs with dual display. To the right and left were 940 MB (without virtual compression) tape archives as small as a cassette audio tape numbering up to 2000 for just that wall. Then there was another wall with similar 940 MB tape drives. Then you had a wall of bigger tape drives with less HDD space on the right most wall. In the center is a IBM robotic computer where each tape drive around with 4 TB compressed archives. There was over 200 of those tapes inside. The robotic arm had a digital display showing the number slot it is at and the robot knows where to put back....it's all automated using a Windows application. He'll call if I made the job.

The computer had a paper showing in MIPs (million instruction processing / second) that numbered in 100,000. They didn't tell me how much TB of RAM it had.

Saturn emu SSF works without BIOS (2006-06-17 21:45)

I found SSF about October 2004 when it was in the alpha...now it's the most advanced Saturn emulator out there. You can play any Saturn game without the bios. You need Windows XP, a fast PC, and DirectX 9.0. It's fast and really, really good. Solid frame rate. It doesn't crash and is 280KB

Two Good ones for one bad one (2006-06-17 22:42)

Despite supporting a multimedia monopoly, MS Xbox 360 is $299 /w 20 gig drive in time for PS3. You got most of the ports of PS3 with this deal. The hardware quality of the PS3 can be average breaking every 14 months.

1 Teraflop (360) vs. 1.8 Teraflop (PS3) isn't that much of difference. Even the grass in Madden NFL 07 for PS3 won't be the driving force of buying one. Resistance: Fall of Man will be cool and a high seller, but you can't tell the difference on a 720p HDTV in most games.

PS3 is a decent buy at $299 because of Cell's power and how games in 2008 could look awesome on it.

Gamers don't want to spend that much. But look what happened 2 yrs ago....those diehard Xbox gamers also bought a PS2 to play some of the best games. Half of them claimed selling their PS2 because it's old and games sucks or whatever. Games don't suck on PS2 though.

Unfortunately, PS3 isn't PS2. It may be overrated because it has MGS4 and Final Fantasy 13. Sure Forza Motorsport 2 can kick ass and out do Gran Turismo 4 in game play. Out doing in gfx and sound is obvious.

I hate downloading 360 kbps mp3s. (2006-06-19 23:31)

When I download trance cds, I constantly wonder why my downloads isn't a 160 kbps m4a. MP3 is obsolete and it won't sound different. I think music should be 160 kbps. Personally, a free Nero AAC encoder sounds good.

I hate RAM detection | Go to first funeral! (2006-06-24 21:30)

Hell yes! I git ta see my hippie relies in northern Minnesota at my grandma funeral at my Dad's sister house. Christ, it's da farst time I been ta church in years! da whole family is Christian. She got cremated, yew know "dust. 'n' I git ta hear em talk about borin stuff lik advances in farm machinery er their tractor does dis much torque thang. Good thang they're not Amish though. dat would suck. They brrrry know whut Internet is!

Windows ain't meetin my expectations again! Cant recognize all my RAM. A patch would be helpful if'n yonder is one.

I copied all da rom images (nes, snes, n64, gen, c64, arcade, sega cd) onto my hard drive fer easy access so today I was playing Star Ocean 'n' Chrono Trigger. Hmm, yonder is voices in Star Ocean. SNES carts usually doesn't have room fer voices except in Madden '93 John says touchdown! 'n' in Street Fighter, a man says, "Fight". Chrono Trigger fer Playstation is whut I own (ne'er played it on PS thou). SNES version is one of da most popular. Yeah, fun. It's funny dat I am gamin on 16-bit.. So primitive games can be fun! I can't believe I am startin too see 'jaggies' on da Xbox 360! It wasn't lik dat b4! My eyes must be playing tricks on me. I luk past da jaggies 'n' keep gamin though. I can't say okay, dis is obsolete already. Stop supportin it altogether. dat's real stupid. I keep buying games 'n' researching em because reading reviews r fun.

Then I am playing Perfect Dark Zero on Xbox 360. Got ta Mission 3 on normal. Sort of hard. Defo not brilliant at this. Got da job done I did, but advaintsd very, very slowly. Died once already.

Bored! (2006-06-29 15:18)

I downloaded MultiTES4 mod for ESIV. Installed it It's very cool, but I have no LAN buddies. Bob is working at Home Depot and did not call since April. He lives in Hammond, WI. He is never home. He hates AAC and still uses MP3 so that DVD9 is meaningless to him.

Found out Game Quest went out of business in River Falls. I went to Toyriffic and bought the PSP RPG Tales of Eternia (Tales of Destiny II) and Moto GP 2006 for Xbox 360. I got ripped off on the PSP game, but Tales of Eternia won't be coming to America and Toyriffic won't be buying that game again! Haven't bought PSP game since April 2005 because there wasn't anything out there. Am aware it'll update my firmware to v2.5 making it impossible to run DGEN and SNES 9x. PSP is region free so I can play Tales of Eternia. It got 9.0 out of 10 at Eurogamer.com making it the only elite RPG for PSP.

Moto GP 2006 looks stunning. Gfx and gameplay is about a 9.0. Fun is where its at!

By the way I am going crazy in the basement. Bored out of my fucking mind. I have reason to believe that life will change so I'll keep being crazy in the basement. Esurience wants to wait a week to return the phone call and that's a royal pain. I could axe down mail boxes, but that's stupid. I been to a movie theater today. Thought of mooning drivers to see if anyone would taunt at me

Good thing I believe in afterlife (2006-07-01 08:20)

2004 XP14, a half-mile wide chunk of hard rock traveling at 40 000 miles an hour, will miss the Earth by a few hundred thousand miles.

I don't know what I would've done. Probably sit in a lawn chair, some Mountain Dew/Vodka and SunChips and watch the show! I would've called Randy and invited him to watch the show! There wouldn't be any possibility to get laid until heaven! I would like to thank God, the other god and The Holy Spirit for saving humanity from Armageddon. Amen!

Now to go to Gamestop!

Cars will not look like Lexus 2054 in 2014 | Great fireworks display at Webster (2006-07-04 23:14)

Saw fireworks on the July 2nd by Webster, WI. The town had an hour long fireworks display which is suppose to improve each year. Rockets were shot over a baseball diamond. My family arrived there at 7PM and stayed for 10PM. People were doing their own thing. 250 Cars were park on both sides of the road. We had to walk up the hill, over the railroad tracks, to the diamond and there is so many people in Webster, you get lost.

Two of my cousins were there. One was 9th grader, other was 6th grader. Both like Diablo 2. Wouldn't shut up about this RPG. Lars says he got up to level 65 in the game. I bought over the handhelds, played New Super Mario Bros. for 3 hours outside, and then stopped because there was conversation. Advanced to 4th level in NSMB. Then I played an emulated version of Gunstar Heroes, Phantasy Star IV - End of the Millennium and Shining Force 2 on PSP. Trying not to go in detail.

Watched "The Three Burials of Melquiades Estrada" that night Tommy Lee Jones taking a corpse to Mexico before the FBI gets him.

Then today I watched the anti-American BBC World Newcast on BBC America. They mentioned America's Independence Day all the time and showed Discovery shuttle launch for good measure. Then I watched Fox News Channel and felt all patriotic again. But of course they didn't come to America to show it, they showed it at Camp Victory in Baghdad because to them that was important. Then they talked about our little gas shortage because it would hurt us somehow. We do have the most roads anywhere in the world and most advanced freeway system with vehicles traveling with no or little gaps since 1955. Point is we use a lot of gas and we need corn ethanol. We really do ignore our passenger trains. We got the massive corn oil supply. The problem is conversing farmers that it's profitable. All you have to do is fit your vehicle to take ethanol. Sorry, but the truth is Audi RSQ Concept or Lexus 2054 will not be on the road before 2015. Point is anything you see today on the street will exist in 2014 except newer models and 2 miles to the gallon better.

CIE Luv:: Best color compression! (2006-07-05 02:04)

PSINext: High dynamic range lighting - or HDR - is a term we're starting to hear more and more of these days. Can you explain to us exactly what HDR is, and what it means to people sitting in front of their screens playing a game?

Marco: Yeah, it's a very common term nowadays and it's often misused.

When we render an HDR image, we are basically storing all of the information we need to represent the amount of light that passes through every pixel of our picture, so that we can capture a scene in all its color and luminance-range richness. Unfortunately, current low-cost display technologies (common LCDs, CRTs, etc..) can't properly display an HDR image, so we need to go through a process called 'tone mapping' to remap our image to an LDR (Low Dynamic Range) image in order to display it on a screen.

Tone mapping can also be used to simulate the way our eyes slowly adapt to different light conditions. In the end it means a better visual experience for gamers, although it will take time for the industry to get it right.

PSINext: What are some examples of scenery within a game that benefit from HDR?

Marco: Compared to LDR rendering, every scene that requires a very low or very high global luminance image, or an image with a high contrast ratio, would benefit from HDR lighting.

It's a way to avoid globally saturated images where everything comes out too bright or too dark and the viewer loses all that precious lighting/color information that enriches an image and makes it believable.

Furthermore, a specific tone mapping operator can give to a developer an extra tool to improve story telling, because it can be tweaked to simulate particular behaviors of human vision. It's important to understand that HDR is not just about nice bloom effects - it's much more than that. There's no such thing as LDR imagery in our every day lives.

PSINext: People have come to associate high dynamic range lighting with on-chip hardware support for either FP16 or FP32 HDR rendering. How does Team Ninja implement NAO32, and can it be considered 'real' HDR?

Marco: The FP16 and FP32 rendering formats give a developer the opportunity to collect per pixel information (respectively 8 and 16 bytes per pixel); hence they easily enable us to render and to store an HDR image. Unfortunately, these framebuffer formats are inherently slow because they require more memory bandwidth and increased memory space: an FP16 720p image with 4X anti-aliasing requires about 30 MBytes of memory!

At the same time it's important to understand that it does not matter how we store our HDR images so long as we find a way to encode them without losing too much information.

The RGB color space is not very efficient at encoding HDR images, so after a bit of research we found another color space that is far more efficient at representing HDR images. Its name is is is , and it splits a color into 3 components: one is not normalized and represents how intense a color is (luminance), while the other 2 components are normalized between 0 and 1.

Gregory Ward, a pioneer of HDR imaging, exploited this color space many years ago to store HDR images in a file format he called LogLuv, so we built upon that work and we customized it to our purposes.

PSINext: So NAO32 is a means for you to preserve memory while at the same time retaining image quality, is that correct?

Marco: Correct. The main idea behind NAO32 is that we want to trade shading power to regain memory space and bandwidth (very precious resources on a console). So instead of encoding our HDR colors into a FP16 or FP32 frame buffer, we devised a scheme to use RSX pixel shading units to convert an RGB color in a CIE Luv color that only requires a common RGBA8 frame buffer (4 bytes per pixel, half the space of a FP16 pixel) to be fully stored.

The quality of this format is really outstanding. Even if it uses half the space/bandwidth of common HDR rendering solutions, it really makes no compromises at all in image quality.

There's no magic here: HDR rendering costs are shifted from memory to shaders, and so our shaders are a bit longer now (between 3 and 5 cycles). We believe it's a very good trade-off. Furthermore, it enables HDR rendering and multisample anti-aliasing on GPUs that do not natively support AA with floating point render targets such as FP16 and FP32.

We also developed a faster 3 bytes per pixel version called NAO24 (predictable, isn't it?) that supports a narrower dynamic range with less accuracy. And although the quality was quite decent in most cases, we decided against making any compromises, and so in the end we did not use it.

My final answer is totally positive: NAO32 can be considered a real HDR format.

PSINext: The advantages of reduced space and preserved quality seem like they would have merit in a number of environments. Do you think there may be a place for NAO32 on the desktop, or even on Microsoft's or Nintendo's offerings?

Marco: Dunno about Nintendo's offering, but it might have merit on Microsoft's console if developers wanted something that takes the same storage space as an FP10 render target, but with a much higher level of quality. NAO32 on Xenos would cost developers shading power relative to FP10, however, and they would lose the ability to use the eDRAM for blending as well. So at this time, I believe something like NAO32 makes more sense on RSX than on Xenos.

PSINext: We've spoken here about a number of NAO32's advantages. Are there any notable drawbacks?

Marco: Yes, there are drawbacks too; it's not an all-win situation. GPUs usually support hardware blending in RGB color spaces, hence hardware assisted blending is not going to work on a NAO32 frame buffer - it would produce incorrect results.

There are various ways to overcome this limitation though, such as by emulating blending operations in a pixel shader, or performing blending on a FP16 render target and then composing the result... or even just blending in LDR in a common RGBA8 buffer.

It would be nice to have a GPU that natively supports a CIE Luv frame buffer though.

PSINext: If I may ask, what originally inspired the name NAO32?

Marco: I didn't name it, actually Dean did on Beyond3D. You should ask him! Internally, we used to call it "the funky color space."

PSINext: That's right, I remember that now that you mention it. NAO32 is the better name, for sure.

Straying from HDR for a bit before we finish up, now that Sony has announced the hard drive to be standard in every console, how do you feel this might effect game development in general, and Heavenly Sword in particular?

Marco: I believe it's a big opportunity for all developers to make better games. This generation the ratio between available memory and optical disc read speeds is much higher than what we had in the previous generation, and a standard hard drive is going to help us reduce loading times and give gamers a better experience.

Regarding HS, this announcement is not going to change our plans.

[It has been confirmed that Heavenly Sword will be making use of the hard drive]

PSINext: After getting to play the game at E3, it's clear that a number of intensive effects such as HDR - courtesy of NAO32 of course - and full soft shadowing are in place. What can you tell us about the levels of anti-aliasing and anisotropic filtering, if any, Ninja Theory is utilizing for Heavenly Sword?

Marco: Yep, shadowing is completely dynamic and everything can cast/receive shadows. Soft shadows are achieved taking 12 jittered samples per pixel. Antialiasing is set to 4X (multisampling), but quality wise is not as good as it could be; we need to work on it, and hopefully it will improve over the next several months.

Anisotropic filtering is being used on some specific meshes (floors, walls, etc...) and AFAIK is set to 8x + trilinear.

Got used 2 PCs! (2006-07-10 07:59)

I got a free laptop, but not as fast as the HP Livestrong....it's a 2003 model. HP Pavilion ze5170 with upgraded RAM. It was going to be my mother, but I convensed her that i would use it whenever she wasn't using it for internet. She could take it out of my room whenever. After all it would only be one once every two weeks. Waste of it's usefulness. The Windows XP was very slow because it had Norton Firefall and spyware programs on it and the amount of programs so I reformatted the hard drive and now it boots 3x faster than before.

HP Pavilion ze5170 SPECS

- Penitum 4 HT Technology 2.0 GHz
- 512 MB of RAM PC2400
- ATI Radeon Mobile 32 MB DDR1
- Antiglare LCD
- 40 GB HDD

Then I replaced the CMOS battery in the Compaq Presario 5862, and it booted Win98 fine now. Slower then I am use too. The power button is shot. I need to unplug the power cord to turn it off. My version of Commodore 64 (although I have consoles that are older and outperform C64) It still had a modem and no Ethernet card. I had to install one afterwards. It's slow, but it runs MS Office and Firefox.

Compaq Presario 5862

- Athlon 650 MHz
- 256 MB of SDRAM
- Windows 98 SE
- 4x DVD-ROM
- 48x CD Burner
- Tyan Radeon 9250 64 MB DDR (better then the original Geforce 256 by far)

Got 2 extra computers. I bought Half-life 2 Episode 1 and Titan Quest (Diablo clone) yesterday after reading online reviewa. I thought a Diablo clone would be more fun than Spellforce 2 (RPG/RTS hybrid). Both got about the same score at gamerankings.com.

Titan Quest (aka Dungeon Siege III) (2006-07-11 10:50)

Am playing this Titan Quest (aka Dungeon Siege III) I've heard so little about these one. Walking in Wal-mart and kind of thought this was the one. It's standard hack 'n slash RPG fundamentals with above average replay value if your favorite game used to be Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction. Graphics are 8.5...already looks better than Dungeon Siege 2 (circa 2005 Gas Powered Games). DS2 was February's favorite. This along with First Encounter Assault Recon will be my July favorites. Elder Scrolls IV (4 pc) was last month's favorite now that i think about it. It was kind of the best of the bunch i bought last month says Gamerankings.com.

Plays a lot like Dungeon Siege 2 from the user interface. [i] is for inventory. [s] is for skills. [c] is for character window. Portals are free.

PCSX2 0.9.1 out (2006-07-23 21:56)

PCSX2 0.9.1 is out at sourceforge.org (you can download the source code). Some PS2 games are suppose to be playable. Most 2D games and menus started reaching 60-120 fps, ingame 3D was still slow. During this time, Pcsx2 started supporting dual core CPUs (frame rates usually doubled). With release 0.9.1 in Summer 2006, most 3D scenes hit frame rates of 15-30fps on a 3GHz machine. It's 25 frames per second faster than 0.9 because PCSX2 has enjoyed rapid increases in performance since January. I found out that the FMV wouldn't show up the MPEG2 decoder is absent despite having "ffdshow codec pack" installed. Program now comes with a PS2 and PSone bios.

Didn't have controller set up.

X or start didn't do anything....DVD-ROM didn't want to load data.

Settings I used

Graphics: default

DVD: EEP Polling CDVD driver 0.4.0

Sound: P.e. Op.S SP2

I finally got Valkyrie Profile Lenneth (anime JRPG), I saw it under glass early last year for $100 and that's the only real copy I saw. The PSP has potential. Why is it popular? People liking console RPGs especially Enix RPGs would be interested anyways. Only 50,000 copies were shipped before this game. Another videogame based on Norse mythology is Too Human for Xbox 360.

I also bought 3D Realm's Prey. Upgraded dead project of the late 1990s resurrected by Human Head Studios and Venom Studios with added ideas and updated first person shooter game play to give Far Cry Instincts and Perfect Dark Zero a run for it's money. Thought it was a good investment.

Still am playing Titan Quest. Graphics are really nice, best looking action RPG out. You should buy it. The game lags at 1600x1200 so I am wondering if I should put Nvidia nTune 5 to good use. nTune 5 will overclock my Athlon 64 (possible up to 3 GHz, but that's crazy) , 2.5 GB accessible DDR RAM, and GPU making my system faster. One thing I noticed is the RAM clock speed was 400 MHz with one gig and now 333 MHz with 3 Gigs installed . I want it back to normal and am tempted to use nTune. First thing to do is use stress test for 10 minutes to see how stable my hardware is at stock clockspeeds. Picture of what it looks like.

Job confirmed (2006-07-28 21:11)

The Hartford building hired me yesterday. I'll start on Monday for $11/ hour in work trials. Pretty good pay. Anywoo, been playing Gran Turismo 4 and forgot how fun it was for a last generation game. Catharton may think that PS2 graphics suck, but they have no appreciation for GT4. You can race pickups! I tried half of the tracks in time trials...used the 2003 Shelby Series 1 for the majority racing my ghost.

Saw the new screens of the new Sonic the Hedgehog for PS3. It's alright. The cast is from the anime Sonic X. I know how much Sonic Adventure voice acting stunk like rotten milk. Disavow indeed. At least Sonic has got his speed back! If I don't get a PS3 by December, this game may be a 360 purchase.

Another game I want for PS3 is Resistance: Fall of Man, a first person shooter set in the 1950s Europe. Always looking forward to another Gran Turismo. Problem with PS3s are those may be glitchy when it first comes out like the PS2 in the beginning.

My opinion of the military. Our soldiers are doing well in Iraq or Iran or Afghanistan despite the 2000+ death count. We got the A1M1/A1M2 Abraham tanks and HumVs with some of the better assault rifles or machine guns. General Motors Defense even makes dumb-mine plows for A1M1 tanks. I don't believe that they should come back until US is 95 % safe from nuclear attack from axis of evil.

Square-Enix makes console | Free H264, H263 converter (Mediacoder) (2006-08-08 19:32)

Gameindustry.biz confirmed that Square-Enix is entering the console manufacturing like Nintendo thru their acquired hardware department, Taito.

I found this free CT HE-AAC v2 encoder in Mediacoder 0.5.0 last week. It's probably the best low-bitrate encoder I have ever tried (even better then Vorbis). A 56 kbps mp4 sounds like a 128 kbps mp3. Mediacoder is a front end converts any video format to H.264, H.263+, and WMV8 and is better than RealAnime 4.2 (also on my computer). With H.264, it successfully does 2 passes which improves compression. There is an option to set the file size. It will also output in H.264 at Sony PSP resolution automatically naming the file for you!

I plan on buying Disgaea 2 and Xenosaga 3 this month, Valkyrie Profile 2 next month and then Final Fantasy 12 when it is $20. I don't want Dead rising. I have over 100 PS2 games which is much more I can play after I start my job. I started Grandia 2, a GameArts RPG, last week. It's not very good.

Then I played 5 hours of New Super Mario Bros, 2 hours of Mario and Luigi Partners in Time, and 1 hour 30 minutes of Lunar Legend. Lunar Legend is worst then Lunar The Silver Star Story because all the FMV, voice acting is gone, and the audio sounds very low bitrate. More games included 4 hours of Doom 3, 2 hours of Forza Motorsport on Xbox; 5 hours of Prey, 3 hours of Call of Duty 2 on Xbox 360. I haven't touched Elder Scrolls IV or Titan Quest since July.

Ian's DivX vs. x264 test (2006-08-19 08:13)

You got DivX 6.1.1 (H263) on your computer vs. alpha build X264 (H264).

I used AutoScreenRecorder 2.1 Pro (freeware) has little dialog on top, but uses FLASH (viewable by anyone)!

DivX 6.1.1 under

600 Kbps

Multipass Nth Pass

Insane Compression

X264 build 555

606 kbps

Multipass Nth Pass

6 RDO (Production Quality)

Results

DivX (234 k)

x264 (264k)

Winner you decide. DivX has better compression. DivX clearly has the edge in these files. It's cleaner. I think the resolution is a little smaller in X264 to make up for the slightly higher bitrate. x264 is suppose to be better because at low bitrates it is really efficent, but for recording desktop, it's not true.

History of Dreamcast (2006-08-25 21:55)

American Launch 9/9/1999

Best Selling Game: Sonic Adventure

The Sega Dreamcast (Japanese: code-named "Blackbelt," "Dural," and "Katana" during development) was Sega's seventh & final video game console and the successor to the company's Sega Saturn. An attempt to recapture the console market with a next-generation system, it was designed to supersede Sony's PlayStation and Nintendo 64, and although generally considered to be "ahead of its time" (literally fifteen months before the PlayStation 2 and three years (based on original release dates, not U.S. release dates) before GameCube or Xbox) it failed to gather enough momentum before the release of the PlayStation 2 in March 2000. After the Dreamcast was discontinued, Sega withdrew entirely from the console hardware business.

History

When the time came to design the successor to the Sega Saturn, the new President of Sega, Shoichiro Irimajiri, took the unusual step of hiring an outsider. He hired Tatsuo Yamamoto from IBM Austin to head a skunkworks group to develop the next-generation console. It soon became apparent that the existing Japanese hardware group led by Hideki Sato did not want to relinquish control of the hardware department, bringing rise to two competing designs led by two different groups.

Design

A timeline of the development of the console's GPU may be found here.

The Japanese group led by Hideki Sato settled on an Hitachi SH4 processor with a PowerVR graphics processor developed by VideoLogic (now Imagination Technologies) and manufactured by NEC. This was originally codenamed "White Belt". The first Japanese prototype boards were silkscreened "Guppy", and the later ones "Katana".

The US skunkworks group (in a secret suite at the 303 Twin Dolphin Drive building) led by Tatsuo Yamamoto settled on an IBM/Motorola PowerPC 603e processor with a 3dfx Voodoo 2 graphics processor, which was originally codenamed "Black Belt". The first US prototype boards were silkscreened "Shark".

The Japanese hardware was codenamed "Dural", then later, "Katana". "Black Belt" and "Shark" were the only code-names used by the US hardware team (the hardware team was called "Black Belt team"; the "Shark" was in response to the Japanese team's "Guppy").

When 3dfx declared its Initial Public Offering (IPO) in April 1997, it revealed every detail of the contract with Sega. Sega had been keeping the development of its next-generation console secret during this competition, and was outraged when 3dfx publicly laid out its deal with Sega over the new system in the IPO.

In July 1997, perhaps as a result of 3dfx's IPO, it was decided that the Japanese "Katana" would be the chosen format, renamed Dreamcast. In September 1997, 3dfx filed a lawsuit against Sega and NEC (later including VideoLogic), stating "breach of contract", and accusing Sega of starting the deal in bad faith to take 3dfx technology, although they later settled.

Launch

The Dreamcast was released on November 27, 1998 in Japan, on September 9, 1999 in North America (the date 9/9/99 featured heavily in US promotion) and on October 14, 1999 in Europe. The tagline used to promote the console in the US was, "It's thinking", and in Europe "Up to 6 Billion Players".

The Dreamcast was the first console to include a built-in modem and Internet support for online gaming (besides the NES, Satellaview, and the Nintendo 64DD). It enjoyed brisk sales in its first season, and was one of Sega's most successful hardware units. In the United States alone, a record 300,000 units (citation Maclean's September 24, 1999) had been pre-ordered before launch and Sega sold 500,000 consoles in just two weeks (including 225,000 sold on the first 24 hours which became a video game record until the PlayStation 2 launched a year later). In fact, due to brisk sales and hardware shortages, Sega was unable to fulfill all of the advance orders. Sega confirmed that it made $98.4 million on combined hardware and software sales with the Dreamcast with its September 9, 1999 launch. Sega even compared the record figure to the opening day gross of Star Wars Episode I: The Phantom Menace, which made $28.5 million during the first 24 hours in theaters.

Before the launch in the United States, Sega had already taken the extra step in displaying Dreamcast's capabilities in stores nationwide. Much like the PlayStation's launch in North America, the displays of titles such as Soul Calibur, Sonic Adventure, Power Stone, and Hydro Thunder helped the Dreamcast succeed in the first year.

Electronic Arts announced it would not support the Dreamcast unless it sold 1 million units. When this happened within a record 90 days, EA went back on their word and declined to support the Dreamcast in favor of Sony's upcoming PlayStation 2. Although the Dreamcast had none of EA's popular sports games (due in part to EA's losses from the past Sega Saturn), Sega Sports titles helped to fill that void.

Competition

In April 1999, Sony announced its PlayStation 2, designed to be backwards-compatible with the older PlayStation. The actual release of the PS2 was not until March 2000 in Japan, and late October 2000 in the US. Sony's press release, despite being a year ahead of the launch of the PS2, was enough to divert a lot of attention from Sega. With the looming PS2 launch in Japan, the Dreamcast was largely ignored in that territory. The Dreamcast had great initial success in the US, but had trouble maintaining this with the PS2's release.

Dreamcast's overall superior games (vs. early PS2 games), online capabilities including SegaNet (the PS2 would not go online until late 2002), and significantly lower price (1/2 cost) did little to help sales once the Playstation 2 was launched. American public attention was focused upon the Playstation 2's much hyped graphics and its ability to play DVDs (the DVD format did not catch on in Japan until after the release of the PS2 as the LD was the established standard). During the holiday season of 2000, the Dreamcast was largely ignored even as the PlayStation 2 was plagued by production shortages, as people often paid in excess of $1000 on eBay for Sony's next-generation console.

The biggest competition between the two systems in the US was their football games (NFL 2K1 vs. Madden NFL 2001). Both games were highly regarded with NFL 2k1 having the advantage of online play (coinciding with release of SegaNet) and Madden arguably having a graphics edge. NFL 2K1 outsold Madden 2001. It sold about 410,000 copies which was about the number of PS2s sold in America [citation needed].

Quality of the overall PlayStation 2 library wouldn't catch up until a year later after developers abandoned Dreamcast development en masse and cancelled many nearly completed projects. Sony already enjoyed brand-name dominance over Sega after the huge success of the original PlayStation and commercial failure of the Sega Saturn, Sega 32X, and Sega CD, which contributed to poorer sales of the Dreamcast.

In 2000, the announcement of the Microsoft Xbox and Nintendo GameCube was widely regarded as the last straw for the Dreamcast, since both competitors had deep pockets, which fueled speculation that Sega did not have the resources for a prolonged marketing campaign.

Sega's decision to release the Dreamcast early, or even at all, is still debated. While it was largely regarded as a risky gamble, the Dreamcast was initially successful. Ultimately, anticipation of competitors' newer consoles resulted in stagnation of Dreamcast sales. The GameCube and Xbox weren't released until well after the Dreamcast was officially discontinued (nearly a year later).

End of production

On January 31, 2001, Sega announced that production of Dreamcast hardware was to be discontinued by March of that year, although the 50 to 60 titles still in production would be published. The last North American release was NHL 2K2, which was released in February 2002. With the company announcing no plans to develop a next-generation successor to the Dreamcast, this was Sega's last foray into the home console business. By the time Sega decided to cease development of the Dreamcast, about 10 million consoles had been sold. One key reason cited for the failure of the Dreamcast was Sega's poor relations with the games publishers (such as Electronics Arts, following the poor performance of previous consoles).

Though the Dreamcast was officially discontinued in early 2001, commercial games were still developed and released afterwards, particularly in Japan. Many consider the critically acclaimed arcade shooter Ikaruga developed by Treasure to be the Dreamcast's swan song. It was released in September 2002 in Japan only after a large amount of speculation on the game's fate; its US release was on the GameCube in April 2003. Hacked unreleased games like Propeller Arena and Half-Life continued to become available to the public by warez groups like Echelon.

On February 24, 2004, Sega released their final Dreamcast game, Puyo Pop Fever, although a small number of third-party games are still being released, such as Trizeal, Rajirugi, and most recently Under Defeat (released in March 2006).

Despite its short lifespan, the Dreamcast is still a very popular and highly-regarded console among many fans due to its impressive library of both mainstream and quirky titles. It is even starting to become a cult classic, as the system is getting harder to find (in fact, although the Dreamcast was officially discontinued in January 2001, Sega continued to produce the console for a short time afterwards due to rising demand, not least among collectors and hardcore fans). Several Dreamcast emulation projects have emerged after the Dreamcast's end of production, with Chankast being the most notable.

GD-ROM

The Dreamcast used a proprietary format called GD-ROM or "GigaDisc" for storing games and software. Sega chose the GD-ROM format for its increased capacity while using inexpensive compact disc technology. All Dreamcast consoles could also play audio compact discs until the introduction of revised GD-ROM drives in 2001 that could not read burned CDs of any kind.

Windows CE

Microsoft co-operated with Sega in hopes of promoting its Windows CE operating system for video games. Windows CE offered easy porting of existing PC applications, but offered limited capabilities compared to the Dreamcast's native operating system. When developers took advantage of the easy development offered by Windows CE, the resulting games (e.g., Sega Rally 2) lagged in performance and framerate. The only Windows CE application known by most users was the pack-in CD containing a CE-based dialer and web browser.

The Dreamcast used the same technology as the Sega NAOMI arcade game hardware platform, therefore NAOMI-based games such as Crazy Taxi were easily ported to the Dreamcast. The Dreamcast, however, had less memory and games were loaded from GD-ROM discs (while some NAOMI games were released on GD-ROM most used ROM boards).

Graphics Output

The Dreamcast is able to output true 640x480 VGA (480p60 EDTV), which (at the time) set it apart from other consoles. The system, when combined with the VGA adapter accessory (mentioned below), had the ability to display high-res, non-interlaced picture(s).

The feature was underused by the public despite the potential for improved video quality with the use of a PC monitor or HDTV set. This was likely due to lack of knowledge on the subject. Also, a few notable games were not compatible with this mode, including certain Capcom fighting games and 2D shoot-'em-up games.

Other well known graphic implementations such as, cel-shading and bump mapping, were first seen on Sega's console. In fact, the first completely cel-shaded animation game was Jet Set Radio (Jet Grind Radio in US), released in 2000 on the Dreamcast.

Connectivity

Much like the successive GameCube, the Dreamcast has the ability to connect to a handheld gaming unit. Using a special cable, with specific games, the Dreamcast could connect with the Neo Geo Pocket. SNK and Capcom took advantage of the connectivity to allow players of Capcom vs SNK and The King of Fighters to trade points between the console and handheld versions of their games.

Online

Dreamcast consoles came packed with a disc containing web browser software allowing dial-up Internet access. Dream Passport was the Japanese browser, Planetweb was used in America, and DreamKey in Europe. Version 3.0 of Planetweb included broadband capabilities, Java, Flash, and mouse support. In Europe, the final version of DreamKey was 3.0.

While Planetweb was a browser created specifically for the US market, Europe's DreamKey was in fact a translated version of the Japanese Dream Passport. It was used on some American game releases (such as Metropolis Street Racer); here it was called Internet Viewer.

The Dreamcast was one of the first home console systems to offer online gameplay with the game ChuChu Rocket! (which was distributed free to Dreamcast owners in Europe). Sega also has the honors of the first online console sports title (Sega Sports NFL 2K1) as well as the first ever online console RPG (Phantasy Star Online). The SegaNet on-line dial-up service (US $29/month membership) attracted 750,000 subscribers in America alone. About twenty-two games, including Quake III Arena and Phantasy Star Online, supported SegaNet. Other major online games include 4x4 Evolution (first crossplatform online game), Starlancer, and Ferrari F355 Challenge. Although the online features of most commercially-released online-capable Dreamcast games are no longer supported, with the complete shut-down of support in the US, some games are still playable online in Japan. Yet, fans have developed servers for playing Phantasy Star Online and the North American version of Quake III Arena which can still be played online by finding or setting up a server using software and a map pack released by Sega. The games still playable online are Quake III Arena, Starlancer, 4x4 Evolution, Phantasy Star Online, Maximum Pool Online, and Sega Swirl, which still have dozens of players online.

In Europe, the online service was known as Dreamarena. This was created and operated for Sega Europe by a partnership between ICL and BT (ICL developed the web sites and software, with BT providing the dial-up capabilities and network infrastructure). The service was free and the game servers hosted within it could not otherwise be accessed from the Internet. Dreamarena ran until the beginning of March 2002. As the DreamKey web browser was customised to only work with Dreamarena, Sega subsequently offered a free replacement version which would allow connection with the user's own Internet service provider.

The modem module in the Dreamcast could easily be replaced with a broadband module to allow networked gaming over Ethernet. Phantasy Star Online, Quake III Arena, Unreal Tournament, Outtrigger, Bomberman Online, and POD Speedzone included support for this device. It should be noted, however, that not all of those games supported the Ethernet adapter; the US release of Phantasy Star Online only officially supported dial-up connectivity, however it was possible to use the Japanese version of the game to configure usage of the Ethernet adapter (or, alternatively, another Japanese title that configured the same settings in the system BIOS) and then play the US release of the game with the Ethernet adapter.

The standard Dreamcast unit is made of white and grey plastic. The power light, like the Dreamcast logo in NTSC regions, is orange (this color was chosen because the Japanese consider it to be lucky). Games were sold in jewel cases which initially had the Dreamcast name and logo on a white background, but later games used a black background (blue in Europe).

The unit was packaged with a video cable which supports composite video and right/left stereo audio. Available separately were an S-Video cable, a RF connector (included as standard in the UK and Portugal) and a VGA adapter (see accessories below).

In the United States, a black Dreamcast was released in limited numbers with a sports pack which included two Sega Sports titles. Electronics Boutique offered a blue Dreamcast through its website. Similar offerings were sold through the Lik-sang website. Cases of different colors like blue, red, orange, and green were sold for replacements of the original casing. In Japan, Sega released many varieties of the system, including limited edition Sonic anniversary editions, and Hello Kitty outfits. The Sega Dreamcast Hello Kitty was released in 2000 in Japan. Due to its limited production, it has become an extremely rare collector's piece. The package contains a keyboard, a controller, a VMU, a mouse, and a Hello Kitty trivia game. The console and accessories are translucent pink in color with some printed designs. The Sega Dreamcast Hello Kitty special edition was also available in a blue with all the same accessories.

The Brazilian version, manufactured by Tec Toy under license, was essentially the same as the US version, however its video output was converted to the PAL-M standard and it didn't come with the modem, which was available separately.

The Dreamcast in Europe had its spiral logo in blue, similar to the logo on earlier Sega systems. This change in logo is thought to have been for copyright reasons. A German company, Tivola, had been using a similar swirl logo years before Sega branded the Dreamcast with the orange swirl. As well as the VGA mode (again using an adapter), the European Dreamcast supported PAL video, in both 50Hz and 60Hz modes. This was a first for games consoles, as no previous PAL console had offered the option to play games at full speed, using the ability of more modern PAL televisions to operate at 60Hz. This became a feature of all major consoles released since. The 60Hz option had to be enabled on the game disc, however, but only a small number of games lacked this. Games in Europe were sold in jewel cases exactly twice as thick as their US counterparts, possibly to enable the inclusion of thick instruction booklets containing instructions in multiple languages.

A third-party company from China named Treamcast released a portable modified Dreamcast which used the original first party Dreamcast components with a custom made plastic casing. This small system with its fold-down display resembled the later PS One. Many companies included software and a remote with the unit that enabled it to play

MP3s and Video CDs. When the internet import videogame store, Lik-Sang, contacted Sega to ask permission to sell a modified version of the system with Sega trademarks on the system, they were told that Sega did not approve of the unit, and felt that it violated their trademarks. In reality, this system is not any different from selling a Dreamcast pre-modified with a third party shell, as the system's internals still use first party hardware, and contain no modifications whatsoever aside from the outside casing and modifications for internal sound and video.

Recently, in 2005, the internet import store, Lan-Kwei, has started selling a "Treamcast" portable modified Dreamcast with a 16:9 widescreen LCD. Aside from the cosmetic differences in the case to accommodate the larger screen, there are no differences between the original Treamcast portable modified Dreamcast and the newer widescreen model. The Visual Memory Unit, or "VMU", was the Dreamcast's memory card. It had a monochrome LCD screen, a D-Pad, and two gaming buttons. It could play minigames loaded onto it (a Chao game was obtainable in Sonic Adventure, for example). It could also display a list of the saved game data stored on it, and two VMUs could be connected together (end-to-end, needing no other hardware) to exchange data.

Standard memory cards could also be purchased without the additional features of the VMU. Most of these were manufactured by third-party companies (such as the Nexus Memory Card), although Sega eventually released a 4X memory card. The 4X cards did not have the VMU screen or stand-alone abilities, but they had four times the space by switching between four 200-block sectors.

Controller and Rumble Pack Most Dreamcast games supported a rumble pack ("Jump Pack"), which was sold separately and could be plugged into the controller. In Japan, the Jump Pack was named the "Puru Puru Pack".

The Dreamcast controller offered an analog stick, a D-pad, a Start button, four gaming buttons (labeled A, B, X, and Y), and two analog index finger triggers on the underside. It also contained two slots which fit memory cards or the rumble pack; the uppermost one had a window through which the VMU's display could be seen. The Dreamcast controller was somewhat large and a few players found it difficult to hold.

VGA Adapter Unique to the Dreamcast among current console gaming systems, it could use a VGA adapter for output to a computer display and HDTV compatible sets (which provided much better quality than a television set).

Not all games are compatible with the VGA adapter, but there are work arounds to trick all but a handful of games into working with it.

Dreamcast Mouse and Keyboard The Dreamcast supported a mouse as well as a keyboard which was useful when using the included web browser, but was also supported by certain games such as The Typing of the Dead, Quake 3, Phantasy Star Online and Railroad Tycoon 2. Other games such as REZ offer undocumented mouse support.

Fishing Rod A motion sensitive fishing rod was released for the few fishing games on the system.

Microphone There was a microphone peripheral used for Alien Front Online, version 2.6 of the Planetweb Web browser (long distance calling support), the European Planet Ring collection and Seaman (the first console game to use voice recognition in the US).

Lightgun

Sega also produced a light gun for the system, although this was not sold in the US presumably because Sega did not want its name on a gun in the light of recent school shootings. American versions of light gun games even blocked out using the official gun. Several third parties made compatible guns for the few light gun games released, including The House of the Dead 2 and Confidential Mission. The only other light gun compatible games were Death Crimson OX and its Japanese only prequel, Virtua Cop 2 on the Sega Smash Pack, and a light gun minigame in Demolition Racer No Exit.

Arcade Stick Sega also released the heavy-duty Arcade Stick, a digital joystick with six buttons using the same microswitch assemblies as commercial arcade machines. Although it could not be used for many Dreamcast games due to the lack of an analog joystick, it was well received and helped cement the Dreamcast's reputation for 2D shooters and fighting games. The Arcade Stick itself lives on beyond the Dreamcast, as adaptors are now available to use it on other hardware platforms.

Third-party sticks were also made, like the ASCII Dreamcast fighting Pad, which some regard as having a more comfortable 6-button configuration and a more precise digital direction pad.

Twin Sticks A twin stick peripheral was released specifically for use with the game Virtual-On. This add-on mimicked the original dual arcade stick setup and made gameplay much more precise. They are extremely rare and versions that appear on ebay sell for over $100.

Dreameye Sega developed the Dreameye, a digital camera for the Dreamcast, but it was only released in Japan. Samba de Amigo controller Sega developed a special "maracas" controller for the Samba de Amigo music game. Cancelled Accessories Toward the end of the Dreamcast's lifespan, Sega created and displayed prototypes of a high-capacity VMU/MP3 player, DVD player, and Zip drive peripherals. None of these items became available to the public.

Technical Speculations

CPU: SH-4 RISC CPU with 128 Bit FPU functions for 3D graphics computations (operating frequency: 200 MHz, 360 MIPS, 1.4 GFLOPS)

Graphics Engine: PowerVR2 CLX2, 7.0 Mil polygons/second peak performance, supports Trilinear filtering. Actual maximum in game performance (with full textures, lighting, gameplay, etc...) of 3-5 Mil polygons/second. Tile rendering eliminates overdraw by only drawing visible polygons. This allows more efficient use of polygons and can make games appear to have 2-4 times their actual polygon count (depending on amount of overdraw eliminated).

Memory: Main RAM: 16 MB 64 Bit 100 MHz, Video RAM: 8 MB 4x16 Bit 100 Mhz, Sound RAM: 2 MB 16 Bit 66 MHz

Sound Engine: Yamaha AICA Sound Processor: 22.5MHz 32-Bit ARM7 RISC CPU core, 64 channel PCM/ADPCM sampler, 128 step DSP

GD-ROM Drive: 12x maximum speed (Constant Angular Velocity)

GD-ROM: Holds up to 1.2 GB of data. A normal CD-ROM holds 700 megabytes.

Inputs: USB-like "Maple Bus". Four ports support devices such as digital and analog controllers, steering wheels, joysticks, keyboards and mice, and more.

Dimensions: 189 mm x 195 mm x 76 mm (7 7/16" x 7 11/16" x 3")

Weight: 1.9 kg (4.4 lb)

Color: Majority are white. Some late models from a sports package are black.

Modem: Removable; Original Asia/Japan model had a 33.6 kbit/s; models released after September 9, 1999 had a 56 kbit/s modem

Broadband: these adapters are available separately and replace the removable modem

HIT-400: "Broadband Adapter", the more common model, this used a Realtek 8139 chip and supported 10 and 100 Mbit speeds.

HIT-300: "Lan Adapter", this version used a Fujitsu MB86967 chip and supported only 10 Mbit speed.

Color Output: Approx. 16.78 million simultaneous colors (24 bit)

Storage: Visual Memory Unit ("VMU") 1 Mbit (128 KByte) removable storage device and 4x memory cards that hold four times as much data.

Saturn (2006-08-25 21:58)

The Sega Saturn is a 32-bit video game console, first released on November 22, 1994 in Japan, May 1995 in North America and July 8, 1995 in Europe. Approximately 170,000 machines were sold the first day of the Japanese launch. 5,000 were sold in the weekend following the United Kingdom launch.

At one time, the Sega Saturn held second place in the console wars, placing it above Nintendo's Super Famicom in Japan and Nintendo's Super Nintendo Entertainment System (SNES) in North America and Europe, but the Saturn slowly lost market share to Sony's PlayStation and, outside Japan, the cartridge-based Nintendo 64.

The Japanese Saturn was rushed to the market, just a few weeks ahead of its rival, Sony's PlayStation. This led to very few games being available at launch.

The system was supported in North America and Europe until late 1998, and in Japan until the end of 2000. The last official game for the system, Yukyu Gensokyoku Perpetual Collection, was released by Mediaworks in December that year. Interestingly, a game called Sega Saturn: Lost & Found VOL #1 was released in the US by Older Games in August of 2004 (although it is not playable with a retail, unmodified Saturn).

Sega's 27-member Away Team, comprising employees from every aspect of hardware engineering, product development and marketing, worked exclusively for two years to ensure the Sega Saturn's hardware and design met the precise needs of both the U.S. and Japanese markets. The Saturn was a powerful machine for the time, but its design, with two CPUs and 6 other processors, made harnessing its power extremely difficult. Rumours suggest that the original plan called for a single processor, but a second one was added late in development to increase potential performance.

One very fast central processor would be preferable. I don't think that all programmers have the ability to program two CPUs - most can only get about one-and-a-half times the speed you can get from one SH-2. I think only one out of 100 programmers is good enough to get that kind of speed out of the Saturn.

Third-party development was further hindered by the initial lack of useful software libraries and development tools, requiring developers to write in assembly language to achieve decent performance. Programmers would often utilize only one CPU to simplify development in titles such as Alien Trilogy.

The main disadvantage of the dual CPU architecture was that both processors shared the same bus, and besides 4K of on-chip memory, all data and program code for both CPUs was located in the same shared 2 MB of main memory. This meant that without very careful division of processing, the second CPU would often have to wait while the first CPU was working, reducing its processing ability.

The hardware also lacked light sourcing and hardware video decompression support. Nevertheless, when properly utilized, the dual processors in the Saturn could produce impressive results such as the 1997 ports of Quake and Duke Nukem 3D by Lobotomy Software, and later games like Burning Rangers were able to achieve true transparency effects on hardware that used simple polygon stipples as a replacement for transparency effects in the past.

From a market viewpoint, the architectural design problems of the Saturn meant that it quickly lost third party support to the PlayStation. Unlike the PlayStation's use of triangles as its basic geometric primitive, the Saturn rendered quadrilaterals. This proved a hindrance as most industry standard design tools were based around triangles, and multiplatform games were usually developed with triangles and the PlayStation's larger market share in mind.

If used correctly the quadrilateral rendering of the Saturn would show less texture distortion than was common on Playstation titles, as demonstrated by several cross-platform titles such as Wipeout and Destruction Derby. The quadrilateral-focussed hardware and a 50 % greater amount of video RAM also gave the Saturn an advantage for 2D game engines and attracted many developers of RPGs, arcade games and traditional 2D fighting games. A 4 MB RAM cart, released only in Japan, boosted available memory even further for games such as Capcom's X-Men Vs Street Fighter.

Tomb Raider was originally designed for the Saturn's quadrilateral-based hardware and as a result was incapable of displaying levels containing any triangular parts. This restriction remained in place for most of the 32-bit sequels. In the other hand, the quadrilateral ability allowed the Saturn to render First-person shooter games better than other consoles at the time, games like Quake, Powerslave, Duke Nukem 3D, HeXen. Also, the extra video RAM allowed larger levels than in PlayStation versions.

A true example of the Saturn's capability is widely considered to be the systems version of Shenmue, Yu Suzuki's multi-million dollar project that would eventually find a new home on the Saturn's successor, the Sega Dreamcast. Work on the title is believed to have been fairly complete, and several technical demos and gameplay footage have since been released to the public. The footage displays a system capable of producing fully rendered, entirely 3D locations and characters. The quality of image Suzuki and his team were able to achieve is quite extraordinary considering the Saturn's infamously complicated hardware. Certainly, Shenmue was graphically superior to anything that had been produced on the Saturn before it.

Performance in the North American and European marketplace

The Saturn was launched almost four months ahead of schedule in North America and Europe. This was announced at 1995's E3 (Electronic Entertainment Expo) where Sega representatives were engaged in a public relations battle with Sony. This surprise move resulted in very few sales due to the USD $399 price of the system, versus the announced Playstation launch price of USD $299, and the lack of available software at launch.

In North America, Sega chose to ship Saturn units only to four select retailers which caused a great deal of animosity from unselected companies, including Wal-Mart and KB Toys. Additionally the summer launch broke with the tradition of launching in early fall to coincide with the Christmas shopping season [2]. Sega also struggled against distrust amongst gaming consumers after a series of quickly discontinued add-on peripherals to the Sega Mega Drive/Sega Genesis, including the Sega CD system and the Sega 32X.

Asian models

In Japan Sega licensed the rights to produce Saturns to their hardware partners - Hitachi, who provided the CPUs and several other chips, and JVC who produced the CD drives for most models, although functionally identical Sanyo drives were sometimes used. SunSeibu released a model with a 7-CD changer for use in hotels. The concept of a multi-game player for hotel use is very common in Japan.

European and Australian Saturns are identical as both regions share the same AC voltage and TV standard. There is no internal variation between PAL and SECAM machines as all were shipped with SCART leads. All models are black and externally quite similar to the North American variations. PAL and SECAM machines will have "PAL" next to the BIOS revision number on the system settings screen instead of "NTSC".

MK-80200A-50

In North America the existing tall, single hinged case design used for Sega CD games was adopted for Saturn titles. The cases incorporate a white spine containing a 30 degree stripe pattern in gray, with white outlined lettering displaying the words "Sega Saturn". The manual slides into the case in the same manner as the liner notes in a normal jewel case, and the cover often carries a back insert with information about the game. The manuals were substantially larger than standard CD manuals, and as a result had more room for art.

These cases had several problems:

Their sheer size made them vulnerable to cracking.

The mechanism that keeps the cover closed wears out quickly if the cover is opened and closed too much

There is sufficient empty space inside the case that if the CD comes loose of the case's spindle then it can easily suffer scratching or be shattered during case transportation. Some games (especially early in the system's life) came with a foam brick to keep the disc from falling off the spindle.

Games packaged with the system or a peripheral such as Virtua Fighter and NiGHTS Into Dreams often came in a standard CD Jewel case.

Genesis: 2nd best Sega console (2006-08-25 21:59)

The Sega Genesis as a 16-bit video game console released by Sega in Japan (1988), Europe (1990) and most of the rest of the world.

Development

Although the Sega Master System had proved a success in Brazil and Europe, it failed to ignite much interest in the North American or Japanese markets, which by the mid-to-late 1980s were both dominated by Nintendo with 95 % and 92 % market shares respectively. Hoping to dramatically increase their share, Sega set about creating a new machine that would be at least as powerful as the then most impressive hardware on the market - the 16-bit Commodore Amiga and Atari ST home computers.

Since the System 16 made by Sega was very popular, Hayao Nakayama, Sega's CEO at the time, decided to make their new home system utilize a 16-bit architecture. The final design was ported to the arcade, and eventually used in the Mega-Tech, Mega-Play and System-C arcade machines. Any game made for the Mega Drive hardware could easily be ported to these systems.

The first name Sega considered for their console was the MK-1601, but they ultimately decided to call it the "Sega Mega Drive". "Mega" had the connotation of superiority, and "Drive" had the connotation of speed and power. Sega used the name Mega Drive for the Japanese, European, Asian, Australian and Brazilian versions of the console. The North American version went by the name "Genesis" due to a trademark dispute, while the South Korean versions were called Super Gam*Boy (?????) and Super Aladdin Boy (transliterated from ???????; this was the Korean version of Mega Drive 2). The Korean-market consoles were licensed and distributed by Samsung Electronics.

North American release and further development

In 1987, Sega announced a North American release date for the system of January 9, 1989, making it the second console to feature a 16-bit CPU (the first one being the Mattel Intellivision) and the first to feature single-instruction 32-bit arithmetic. Sega was not able to meet the initial release date and U.S. sales began on August 14, 1989 in New York City and Los Angeles[2] with a suggested retail price of $200 at launch. The Genesis was released in the rest of North America on September 15 of the same year with the price reduced slightly to $190.

The Genesis initially competed against the 8-bit NES, over which it had superior graphics and sound. Nonetheless, it had a hard time overcoming Nintendo's ubiquitous presence in the consumer's home and the huge catalog of popular games already available for it. In an attempt to build themselves a significant consumer base, Sega decided to focus on slightly older buyers, especially young men in their late teens and early 20s who would have more disposable income and who were anxious for more "grown-up" titles with more mature content and/or more in-depth game play. As such, Sega released titles such as Altered Beast and the Phantasy Star series. Although the NES and Nintendo's impending SNES were still threats to Sega's market share, they had forced the theoretically competitive TurboGrafx 16 system into relative obscurity, thanks in part to NEC's poor North American marketing campaign.

Eventually, the main competition for the Genesis became Nintendo's 16-bit SNES, over which it had a head start in terms of user base and number of games, reversing the problem Sega had faced against the NES. The Genesis continued to hold on to a healthy fan base composed significantly of RPG and sports games fans. The release of Sonic the Hedgehog in 1991 began to threaten Nintendo's up-to-then stranglehold on the number one console position in the USA. Sonic was released to replace former mascot Alex Kidd, and to provide the "killer app" that Sega needed. This sparked what was arguably the greatest console war in North American video gaming history.

By 1992, Sega was enjoying a stronghold on the market, holding a 55 % market share in North America. Faced with a slight recession in sales and a brief loss of market share to the SNES, Sega again looked to Sonic to rejuvenate sales. The release of the highly anticipated Sonic the Hedgehog 2, coinciding with an aggressive ad campaign that took shots at Nintendo, fueled Genesis sales a while longer and boosted Sega's market share percentage back up, to an astounding 65 %.

Less than a year later, in 1993, Sega released a redesigned version of the console at a newly reduced price. By consolidating the internal chipset onto a smaller, unified motherboard, Sega was able to both physically reduce the system's size and bring down production costs by simplifying the assembly procedure and reducing the number of integrated circuits required for each unit.

Aside from the release of the Sega CD and 32X add-ons for the Genesis/Mega Drive, Sega's last big announcement came in the form of a partnership with Time Warner in the U.S. to offer a subscription-based service called Sega Channel, which would allow subscribers to "download" games on a month-by-month basis.

Decline in market share

The failures of the Sega CD and 32X, a lack of effective advertising, and disputes between Sega of America and Sega of Japan had taken their toll on the company. By 1994, Sega's market share had dropped from 65 % to 35 %, and the official announcements of newer, more powerful consoles, such as the Saturn, Playstation, and N64 signaled that the 16-bit era was drawing to a close. Interest in the Genesis suffered greatly as a result, compounding its already falling sales. In 1996, less than a year after the debut of their Saturn console, Sega quickly brought their participation in the 16-bit era to an end by discontinuing production of the Genesis and its associated accessories. This obviously angered consumers around the world who had bought the Sega CD and 32X attachments only to see Sega abandon all support. This can, at least in slight, be seen as a contributing factor to the downfall of Sega as a console manufacturer. (see Video game market).

Resurgent popularity

In recent years, there has been something of a revival of interest in the Mega Drive/Genesis, led largely by the grey market trade in both unlicensed cartridges (for instance, the biblically themed output of Wisdom Tree) and dumped ROMs, which are played through emulators such as Kega Fusion, GENS, or Genecyst. There is also a trend towards home programming, using the PC-based SGCC.

In the 2000s, there came a trend toward plug-and-play TV games, and Radica has released licensed, self-contained versions of the Sega Mega Drive/Genesis in both North America (as the Play TV Legends Sega Genesis) and Europe (as the Sega Mega Drive 6-in-1 Plug 'n' Play), which contain six popular games in a small box and control pad. It does not have a cartridge slot, and thus is a dedicated console. However, Benjamin Heckendorn, of Atari portablizing fame, has proven that it is possible to connect a cartridge slot with some soldering.

The GameTap subscription gaming service includes a Genesis emulator, and has several dozen licensed Genesis games in its catalog.

On March 23, 2006, it was announced at the Game Developers Conference in San Jose California that Nintendo will offer Sega Mega Drive/Genesis game ports on the Wii home console. However it is not yet clear whether this includes all titles in the console's back catalogue. The announcement also stated that PC Engine games would be available for download to the virtual console.

On May 22, 2006 Super Fighter Team released the Beggar Prince, a game translated from a 1996 Chinese original. It is the first commercial Sega Megadrive game since 1998 in the North American market. It was released worldwide.

Variations of the Mega Drive/Sega Genesis

Main article: Variations of the Sega Mega Drive

During its lifespan, the Mega Drive and Genesis quite possibly received more officially licensed variations than any other console. While only one major design revision of the console was created during its lifespan, each region has its own peculiarities and unique items, while other variations were exercises in reducing costs (such as the removal of the little-used 9-pin EXT. port) or expanding the capabilities of the Mega Drive/Genesis.

Technical specifications

CPU

Main processor: 16-bit Motorola 68000 (or equivalent)

Runs at 7.61 MHz in PAL consoles, 7.67 MHz in NTSC consoles.

Some systems contained clones of the Motorola 68000 manufactured by Hitachi and Signetics.

Signetics 68K only found in early revisions as this CPU is known to be inefficient.

Secondary processor: 8-bit Zilog Z80 (or equivalent)

Runs at 3.55 MHz in PAL consoles, 3.58 MHz in NTSC consoles

Used as main CPU in Master System compatibility mode.

Memory

Boot ROM: 2 KB

Known as the "Trademark Security System" (TMSS)

When console is started, it checks the game for certain code given to licensed developers

Unlicensed games without the code are thus locked out

If a game is properly licensed, the ROM will display "Produced by or under license from Sega Enterprises Ltd."

Boot ROM is not present on earlier versions of the Mega Drive and Genesis

Some earlier games not designed for the TMSS may not work in later consoles

Main RAM: 64 KBytes

Part of M68000 address space

Video RAM: 64 KBytes

Cannot be accessed directly by CPU, must be read and written via VDP (Video Display Processor - see below)

Secondary RAM: 8 KBytes

Part of Z80 address space

Used as main RAM in Master System compatibility mode

Audio RAM: 8 KBytes

Cartridge memory area: up to 4 MBytes (32 Megabits)

Part of M68000 address space

Game cartridges larger than 4 MBytes must use bank switching

Graphics

The Mega Drive has a dedicated VDP (Video Display Processor) for playfield and sprite control. This is an improved version of the Sega Master System VDP, which in turn is derived from the Texas Instruments TMS9918. It contains both mode 4 (for Master System compatibility) and mode 5 (for native Genesis games). However, Master System programs can switch the VDP into mode 5 and make use of advanced VDP features. This page only discusses mode 5 capabilities.

Planes: 4 (2 scrolling playfields, 1 sprite plane, 1 'window' plane), per-tile priority

Sprites: Up to 64 (32H)/80 (40H) on-screen, 16/20 per line, 256/320 pixels per line, per-sprite priority

Palette: 512 colors (1536 using shadow/highlight mode)

On-screen colors: 64 × 9-bit words of color RAM, 4 lines of 15 colors plus transparent, allowing 61 on-screen colors (up to 1536 via raster effects and shadow/highlight)

Screen resolution: 256x224 (32Hx28V), 320x224 (40Hx28V), 256x240 (32Hx30V, PAL only), 320x240 (40Hx30V, PAL only)

Interlace mode 1 provides no increase in resolution, but still generates a true interlaced signal

Interlace mode 2 can provide double the vertical resolution (i.e. 320×448 for NTSC, 320×480 for PAL). Used in Sonic 2 for two-player split screen

Scroll size: Width and height independently set to 32, 64, or 128 cells as VRAM allows

Sound

Main sound chip: Yamaha YM2612

Six FM channels, four operators each; channel 6 can be used for PCM data or as a regular channel

Programmable low-frequency oscillator and stereo panning

Secondary sound chip: Texas Instruments SN76489 compatible device built into VDP.

Four-channel PSG (Programmable Sound Generator)

Three square wave channels, one white noise channel

Programmable tone/noise and attenuation

Used for Master System compatibility mode as well as to supplement FM

Different random noise generation compared to a real SN76489/SN76489A chip

Inputs and outputs

RF output: RCA jack connects to TV antenna input

Exists on original model European and Asian Mega Drive and North American Genesis only

Other models must use external RF modulator which plugs into A/V output

A/V output: DIN connector with composite video, RGB video, and audio outputs

Mega Drive and the first model Genesis have an 8-pin DIN socket (same as Sega Master System) which supports mono audio only

Mega Drive 2, Multimega, and other models have a 9-pin mini DIN socket with both mono and stereo audio

Power input: positive tip barrel connector. Requires 9-10 volts DC, 0.85-1.2 A depending on model

Headphone output: Amplified 3.5-mm stereo jack on front of console with volume control

Exists only on original model Mega Drive and Genesis units

Provides stereo audio on models which have the mono 8-pin DIN A/V output

Also suitable for passive speakers

Can be used for mixing audio from the SegaCD

"EXT" port: DE-9F (9-pin female D-connector) on back of console

Used with the Meganet modem peripheral, released only in Japan

Exists on all first-model Japanese and Asian Mega Drive units, and on early American Genesis and European Mega Drive units

May have been used for game selection on arcade adaptations of the Mega Drive / Genesis console

Control pad inputs: two DE-9M (9-pin male D-connectors) on front of console

Expansion port: Edge connector on bottom right hand side of console used almost exclusively for Sega Mega-CD connection not present on Genesis 3 model also used for the Sega Genesis 6 Cart Demo Unit (DS-16) in stores.

The Super Nintendo Entertainment System, also known as Super Nintendo, Super NES or SNES, is a 16-bit video game console released by Nintendo in North America, Brazil, Europe, and Australia. In Japan it is known as the Super Famicom (Super Family Computer). In South Korea, it is known as the Super Comboy and was distributed by Hyundai Electronics.

The Super Nintendo Entertainment System was Nintendo's second home console, following the Nintendo Entertainment System (often abbreviated to NES, released as the Famicom in Japan). Whereas the earlier system had struggled in the PAL region and large parts of Asia, the SNES proved to be a global success, albeit one that could not match its predecessor's popularity in Southeast Asia and North America—due in part to increased competition from Sega's Mega Drive console (released in North America as the Genesis). Despite its relatively late start, the SNES became the best selling console of the 16-bit era.

Even as the original NES/Famicom was at the height of its popularity, several companies were launching their own consoles. In 1987 and 1988, respectively, NEC and Sega launched their contenders: the PC Engine (known stateside as the TurboGrafx-16) and the Mega Drive (one of the first 16-bit home gaming systems). Although the NES would continue to dominate the video game industry for years to come, Nintendo's hardware was beginning to show its age, and though Nintendo executives initially showed little interest in developing a new system, Sega and NEC's growing market share with consoles like the Mega Drive (Sega Genesis) and the PC Engine soon forced Nintendo to reconsider. The Super Famicom's American redesign wasn't used for PAL consoles as the NES's had been.

Masayuki Uemura, the man responsible for designing the Famicom several years earlier, was put in charge of the design of the console and the Super Famicom was released in Japan on November 21, 1990 for ¥25,000. An instant phenomenal blockbuster, Nintendo's initial shipment of 300,000 units quickly sold out within hours. The system was so phenomenally popular that it was said to have attracted the attention of the Yakuza, leading to the decision to ship the devices at night in order to avoid robbery. In Japan, the Super Famicom effortlessly outsold its chief rival, the Mega Drive, and Nintendo retained control over approximately 85 % of the Japanese console market thanks, in part, to Nintendo's retention of most of its key third party developers from the Famicom, including Capcom, Konami, Tecmo, Square Co., Ltd., Koei, and Enix.

Nine months later, in August of 1991 (the earliest sources indicate August 13; exact determination of the date is not possible due to the uncoordinated nature of North American retail video game releases during that era), the Super Famicom was released in North America with a newly redesigned case as the Super Nintendo Entertainment System. The release was an exciting surprise for North American gamers, since Nintendo had been advertising a launch date of September 9. Initially sold for a price of $199 USD, the North American package included the game Super Mario World. The SNES was released in the United Kingdom and Ireland in April of 1992 for £150, with a German release following a few weeks later. The PAL versions of the console looked identical to the Japanese Super Famicom, except for labeling.

Nintendo's Japanese market dominance was, however, not repeated in the American and PAL markets. By the time of launch the Sega Mega Drive/Genesis had already become firmly entrenched in the US and PAL marketplace, helped by the lower cost of the Mega Drive/Genesis console and games, Sega's aggressive marketing in North America, and overall popularity of the console alone. In addition many US gamers had come to expect backwards compatibility from console developers (as was the case with the Atari 2600 and 7800), but the SNES was not designed to play NES cartridges.

Rivalry between Nintendo and Sega produced what is possibly the most notorious console war in gaming history. Nintendo would never achieve market leadership in the PAL region, and did not manage to do so in the U.S. until 1994, benefiting from Sega's pulling out of the market and its continued production of SNES and its games well after the 32-bit era of gaming had started.

In the period of the early 1990s, a blue-collar anti-Japanese sentiment had grown to maturity. While the NES was accused of shoddy construction and poor planning, the SNES was rumored to be a tool of outright economic war. The SNES was incompatible with several American-brand TVs, causing the screen to hop 3-5 times a second, or (in very rare cases) even outright backfire on the TV set. Nintendo fixed all units aftermarket free of charge, but the theory held on for years.

By 1996, the 16-bit era of gaming had ended, and a new generation of consoles, including Nintendo's own Nintendo 64, caused the popularity of the SNES to wane. In October 1997, Nintendo released a redesigned SNES 2 in North America for $99 USD (which included the pack-in game Super Mario World 2: Yoshi's Island). Like the earlier NES 2, the new model was designed to be slimmer and lighter than its predecessor but lacked S-Video and RGB output, and would prove to be among the last major SNES-related releases in America. A similar redesigned Super Famicom Jr. was released in Japan around the same time. All of the American cases from the original NES to the SNES 2 were designed by Lance Barr.

Nintendo ceased production of the SNES in 1999. In Japan, the Super Famicom continued to be produced until September 2003 (also some new games were produced until the year 2000). In recent years, many SNES titles have been ported to the handheld Game Boy Advance, which has similar video capabilities. Some video game critics consider the SNES era "the golden age of video games," citing the many groundbreaking games and classics made for the system, whereas others question this romanticism.

In 2005, it was announced that Super NES will be available as downloadable games for Nintendo's upcoming console Wii, via the Virtual Console service. So far, it is expected that all first-party games released in America will be available, though there is no word yet on third-party or Japanese or European-only games yet.

Game paks, depending on which market they were released in, were of different shapes. The North American model had a rectangular bottom that had inset grooves which when inserted complemented the console's shape whereas the Japanese, Korean, and PAL cartridges had a smoothed curve on the front of the cartridges with no inset grooves. Since the North American console has protruding grooves, the Japanese/PAL game paks could not be inserted without the removal of these grooves and North American game paks being completely rectangular could not fit into the slightly curved opening of the Japanese and PAL console units.

Additionally, a regional lockout chip within the console and in each game pak prevented PAL games from being played on Japanese/North American consoles and vice versa despite the fact that PAL and Japanese cartridges fit in each other's consoles. The Japanese and North American machines had the same region chip, so once the difference in the shape of the game paks was overcome, game paks were interchangeable.

The simplest way to play the Japanese and PAL game paks in the North American system was to use a Game Genie cheat device with the small rectangular piece of plastic from its top removed. This not only circumvents the problem of different game pak shapes but also removes any problem with lockout chips due to the internal design of the Game Genie.

Alternatively, various other adapters or physical modification of the console could overcome regional lockout. Plastic tabs within the game pak slot could be removed (by snapping or cutting them off), allowing a Super Famicom game pak to fit in the North American console; however, care had to be taken not to damage the game pak port.

The working chip lockout system had the hardware in the console act as a lock while the chip inside the game pak was a key. Disconnecting pin 4 of the console's lockout chip caused a situation where there were two keys and no locks. This meant that the lockout chips would not operate and could not halt the console. Games towards the end of the console's lifecycle, such as Super Mario RPG: Legend of the Seven Stars, could detect this deadlock situation and refuse to run, so it later became common to install a switch that disconnected and connected the lockout chip as required.

PAL consoles often faced another modification. Instead of being re-coded, most PAL games were simply slowed down from 60 Hz to 50 Hz, resulting in 17.5 % slower gameplay and sound effects. Additionally, PAL's higher resolution was not taken advantage of, and the extra scanlines were blank, creating large black bars that letterboxed the image. This practice was common across all consoles at the time, but created a squashed and out of proportion picture. As most PAL TVs support a 60 Hz variant of PAL and the SNES hardware made such a thing quite simple to add, a switch to select 50 or 60 Hz operation was often added. Some games, such as Super Mario Kart, were sped up for the PAL market to partially counter this problem, and running these at 60 Hz resulted in even faster gameplay than normal.

As an additional form of region lockout, later games would check that the SNES was running at the speed the game was expecting. PAL games would refuse to run on 60 Hz machines and NTSC games would refuse to run on 50 Hz machines. The solution was to start the game in the native speed and then flick the switch once the region check had successfully completed.

There was an adaptor made by various third parties designed to circumvent the regional lockout issues. A player could plug the device into the SNES (either version) and then place a game that would normally not run on that particular SNES unit (e.g. a rectangular game pak that would not run in the SNES unit designed for round cartridges) into the top. Then, into the back or behind the first game pak, the player would insert another game that would work on this SNES unit. The adaptor would read the game from the main port and use the regional lockout chip programming from the back one.

Throughout the course of its life, a number of peripherals were released which added to the functionality of the SNES. Many of these devices were modeled after earlier add-ons for the NES: the Super Scope was a light gun similar to the NES Zapper (though the Super Scope featured wireless capabilities) and the Super Advantage was an arcade-style joystick with adjustable turbo settings akin to the NES Advantage. Nintendo also released the SNES Mouse in conjunction with its Mario Paint title. Hudson Soft, under license from Nintendo, released the Super Multitap, a multiplayer adaptor for use with its popular series of Bomberman games. It allowed support for up to eight players, although probably the only game to support 8 players is Dino Dini's Soccer.

One of the most interesting and successful first-party peripherals released for the SNES was the Super Game Boy, an adaptor cartridge allowing games designed for Nintendo's portable Game Boy system to be played on the SNES. The Super Game Boy touted a number of feature enhancements over the Game Boy, including color support (in reality, merely the ability to substitute a different color palette: the games themselves were still limited to four colors) and custom screen borders.

Like the NES before it, the SNES saw its fair share of unlicensed third-party peripherals, including a new version of the Game Genie cheat cartridge designed for use with SNES games and a variety of game copier devices. In general, Nintendo proved to be somewhat more tolerant of unlicensed SNES peripherals than they had been with NES peripherals.

Around 1993 Nintendo suffered from software piracy, with the introduction of copybox devices like the Super Wild-card and Super Pro Fighter Q. These devices from Hong Kong were supposedly sold to create a backup of a cartridge, in the event that it would break. Most people used it to play copied ROM images that could be downloaded from BBSes and the internet, or to create copies of rented video games, all activities illegal under federal law.

Japan saw the release of the Satellaview, a modem which attached to the Super Famicom's expansion port and connected to the St. GIGA satellite radio station. Users of the Satellaview could download gaming news and specially designed games, which were frequently either remakes of or sequels to older Famicom titles, released in installments. Satellaview signals were broadcast from April 23, 1995 through June 30, 2000. In the United States, the similar but relatively short-lived XBAND allowed users to connect to a network via a dial-up modem to compete against other players around the country.

During the SNES's life, Nintendo contracted with two different companies to develop a CD-ROM-based peripheral for the console. Ultimately, negotiations with both Sony and Philips fell through, and the two companies went on to develop their own consoles based on their initial dealings with Nintendo (the PlayStation and the CD-i respectively), Philips also gaining the right to release a series of CD-i titles based on popular Nintendo franchises.

Emulation

Like the NES before it, the SNES has retained interest among its fans even following its decline in the marketplace. It has continued to thrive on the second-hand market and through console emulation. Many gamers discovered the SNES after its decline. The SNES has taken much the same revival path as the NES.

Emulation projects began in 1996 with projects such as "VSMC" and "Super Pasofami," which, despite some important initial gains, did not last long past 1998. During that time, two competing emulation projects—Snes96 and Snes97—merged forming a new initiative entitled Snes9x. In early 1998, SNES enthusiasts began programming a console emulator named ZSNES. From then on, these two emulators have continued to offer the most complete emulation of the system and its various add-on chips like the Super FX Chip, although development continues on other emulators as well.

Nintendo took the same stance against the distribution of SNES ROM image files and emulation as it did with the NES, insisting that they represented flagrant software piracy. Proponents of SNES emulation cite as arguments for their continued distribution: the discontinued production of the SNES, the right of the owner of the respective game to make a personal backup, the frailty of SNES cartridges (even though cartridges are far more durable than optical discs), and the lack of certain foreign imports. Starting in the 128-bit era, both Nintendo and emulation proponents began to have a less active stance on this issue.

Despite Nintendo's attempts to stop the proliferation of such projects, ROM files continue to be available on the Internet. Since the console's discontinuation, second-hand market decline, and rapid growth of the Internet, finding the files has become less of a challenge than it had been with the NES. Most general ROM sites offer files for the SNES.

The SNES was one of the first systems to attract the attention of amateur fan translators: Final Fantasy V was the first major work of fan translation, and was completed in 1997.

Many sites that offer SNES ROMs for download claim it that is legal to download and play them for up to 24 hours. This is not true and is still copyright infringement. The 24 hour "rule" is a long practiced device to gain trust and generate traffic on ROM distributing sites.

Along the same lines, the newest claim relates to the Digital Millennium Copyright Act [DMCA]. It is claimed that the law enables ROMs and emulation as long as the original method of use, or a current method, is unavailable. Example: if a game for the SNES isn't available on a current generation console or PC CD-ROM playable by modern PCs, it may be emulated. Noted here as a claim, the veracity is unknown.

It is argued that these issues are the reason that prompted Nintendo to plan the Virtual Console service for the Wii console in an attempt to combat console emulation and piracy.

Technical specifications

The design of the Super Nintendo/Super Famicom was unusual for its time. It featured a low-performance CPU supported by powerful custom chips for sound and video processing. This approach would become common in subsequent video game hardware, but at the time it was new to game developers. As a result early third-party games were of low technical quality. Developers later became accustomed to the system, and were able to take advantage of its full potential. It was the first console capable of applied acoustics in video game audio sold in North America, Europe, and Japan.

CPU

o Core: Nintendo custom '5A22', believed to be produced by Ricoh; based around a 16-bit CMD/GTE 65c816 (a version, not predecessor[citation needed], of the WDC 65C816, used by the Apple IIGS personal computer).

- o The CPU internally contains support circuitry for:

- + Fast unsigned integer multiplication and division
- + Generating an IRQ interrupt every frame at a specific horizontal raster line, vertical raster line, or at a single point in the raster scan
- + The ability to block or allow the NMI interrupts on Vblank coming from the Picture Processing Unit
- + Automatically or manually polling the game controllers or other peripheral devices
- + A memory-mapped 8-bit GPIO Port
- + A DMA unit, supporting two primary modes, general DMA (for block transfers, at a rate of 2.68 MB/s) and Hblank DMA (for transferring small data sets at the end of each scanline, outside of the active display period)
- + Controlling the access speed to or from any area in the memory map
- o The CPU, as a whole, employs a variable-speed system bus, with bus access times determined by the memory location accessed. The possible clock speeds were 1.79, 2.68 and 3.58 Megahertz. But for most purposes the bus runs at 2.68 MHz and drops to 1.79 MHz when accessing certain PPU registers. It works at approximately 1.5 MIPS (using strictly 16-bit instructions) and has a theoretical peak of 1.79 million 16-bit adds per second.

RAM

- o The SNES/SFC 5A22 CPU has direct access to 128KB of Work RAM.

Sound

- o Sound Controller Chip: 8-bit Sony SPC700 CPU for controlling the DSP; running at an effective clock rate around 1.024 MHz.
- + Sound RAM: 64KB shared between SPC700 and S-SMP.
- + Memory Cycle Time: 279 milliseconds
- o Main Sound Chip : Sony S-SMP
- + Hardware ADPCM decompression
- + 8-channel PCM
- + Hardware sound effects pitch modulation, echo effect with feedback (for reverberation) with 8-tap FIR filter, and ADSR and 'GAIN' (discretely controlled) volume envelopes.
- + Polyphony of 8 notes per voice
- o SFX sound chip : Sony\Nintendo S-DSP
- + 3-channel PCM
- o Low-pass filter for improved quality of low-frequency (bass) tones
- o Pulse Code Modulator: 16-bit ADPCM (if programmer uses 4-bit compressed ADPCM samples, expanded to 16-bit resolution, processed with an additional 4-point Gaussian sound interpolation).
- o Although the SNES is normally only able to output stereo sound, a few games (such as Jurassic Park) use Dolby Pro-Logic to create surround sound embedded in the stereo sound signals.
- o Note - while not directly related to SNES hardware, the standard extension for SNES audio subsystem state files saved by emulators is .SPC, a format used by SPC players.

Video

- o Picture Processor Unit: 15-bit
- o Video RAM: 128KB
- + 64KB of VRAM for sprite and layers effect like transparency
- + 64KB of VRAM for screen maps (for 'background' layers) and tile sets (for backgrounds and objects);
- + 512 + 32 bytes of 'OAM' (Object Attribute Memory) for objects; 512 bytes of 'CGRAM' for palette data.
- o Palette: 256 entries; 15-bit color depth (RGB555) for a total of 32,768 colors.
- o Maximum colors per layer per scanline: 256.
- o Maximum colors on-screen: 4,096 without alpha and 32,768 (using color arithmetic for transparency effects).
- o Maximum colors per sprite: 128
- o Resolution: between 256x224 and 512x448. Most games used common resolutions like 256x224, 256x240, 512x224 pixels since higher resolutions caused slowdown, flicker, and/or had increased limitations on layers and colors (due to memory bandwidth constraints); the higher resolutions were used for less processor-intensive games, in-game menus, text, and high resolution images.

+ Resolution 512x224 named pseudo high-resolution is sometimes used for color blending between two sprites with dithering technique. For example: Kirby's Dream Land 3 (aka Hoshi no Kirby 3 in Japan).

- o Maximum onscreen objects (sprites): 128 (32 per line, up to 34, 8x8 tiles per line).

- o Maximum number of sprite pixels on one scanline: 256. The renderer was designed such that it would drop the frontmost sprites instead of the rearmost sprites if a scanline exceeded the limit, allowing for creative clipping effects.

- o Most common display modes: pixel-to-pixel Mode 1 (16 colors (4-bit) per tile; 3 scrolling layers) and per scanline affine mapped Mode 7 (256 colors per tile; one rotating/scaling layer).

Game cartridge size

- o 2 to 32-Mbit (0.25 to 4 MB) which can be accessed at two selectable speeds ('SlowROM' and 'FastROM'). Upon power up, the SlowROM speed is selected by default, unless the game's program code tells it to run at the faster speed. This allowed ROM technology to scale with the system, as all early games were SlowROM, and then most became FastROM towards the end of the SNES/SFC's commercial market lifetime.

- o Custom address decoders employed bank switching techniques to allow for larger sizes, eg. 48-Mbit (6 MB) for Star Ocean and Tales of Phantasia.

Power adapter

- o Transformer Input: NTSC: 120 volts AC, 60Hz, 17 watts, PAL: 240 volts AC, 50 Hz, 17 watts

- o Transformer Output: 10 volts DC, 850 mA (NTSC), 9 volts AC, 1.3 A (PAL)

Game controllers

- o Controller Response: 16ms

- o 2 seven-pin controller ports in the front of the machine

Connectors and switches (may vary between console versions)

- o Bottom

+ Expansion port on the bottom, allowing for Satellaview and a planned CD-ROM expansion, which eventually became the PlayStation.

- o Back

+ RF output, offering only mono-sound and not very good picture quality.

+ Channel 3/4 switch, controlling on which RF channel the audio and video are output.

+ Multi-out, a connector identical to the one on Nintendo64 and GameCube. Outputs stereo (and Dolby Pro-Logic) sound, composite and S-Video signals, and on PAL versions of the console, also RGB signals.

+ Power input

- o Top

+ Cartridge connector

+ Power switch

+ Reset button

+ Power indicator

- o Front

+ 2 seven-pin controller ports

Enhancement chips

As part of the overall plan for the SNES/SFC, rather than include an expensive CPU that would still become obsolete in a few years, the hardware designers made it easy to interface special coprocessor chips to the console. Rather than require a complicated upgrade procedure found in the IBM PC Compatible world of computers, these certain enhancement chips were included inside the plug-in game cartridges themselves if needed for a specific game. This is most often characterized by an extra set of small leads under the cartridge.

Super FX: Developed by Argonaut Software, the Super FX chip is a supplemental RISC CPU that was included in certain game cartridges to perform functions that the main CPU could not feasibly do. The chip was primarily used to create 3D game worlds made with polygons, texture mapping and light source shading. Some 3D game carts that this chip can be found in are Star Fox, Doom, Dirt Trax FX, Stunt Race FX, Vortex, and Winter Gold. The chip however could also be used to enhance 2D games such as Super Mario World 2: Yoshi's Island. This chip went through three revisions, first starting out as a Chip-on-Board epoxy glob-top in the earliest Star Fox cartridges, labeled as Mario Chip-1. Within a year, the chip was given a more conventional surface-mount package and labeled as the Super FX GSU-1, which was used in various games. Finally, the design was tweaked to become the Super FX GSU-2 chip, which had a larger address bus and was manufactured with an improved semiconductor process to allow it to reach its target clock speed of 21 MHz. Although the pinouts and maximum clock speed differ, the instruction set for the Mario Chip-1, FX 1, and FX 2 chips are identical. Star Fox 2, Comanche, and FX Fighter, all games designed to take advantage of the increased power of the Super FX GSU-2, were developed but never released for the SNES/SFC, disappointing many followers of the technology at the time.

DSP-1: This fixed-point Digital Signal Processor chip was created to allow programmers to generate more enhanced Mode 7 rotation and scaling effects in their games, and to perform very fast vector-based calculations. The chip can be found most notably in Pilotwings and Super Mario Kart, as well as a few other games. Later revisions of the chip, the 1A and 1B, were functionally the same but included bugfixes in their internal math calculations.

DSP-2: A bitmap scaling and bitplane conversion chip used only in one game cartridge, Atari's port of Dungeon Master to the SNES console.

DSP-3: An assistant chip used only in one Japanese game for the Super Famicom titled SD Gundam GX. Although this chip does handle graphics decompression and bitplane conversion, a large portion of memory inside this chip is dedicated to rendering a very complicated title screen, leading one to the likely conclusion that its inclusion was more intended to prevent the game from being easily pirated.

DSP-4: A DSP used in only one game cartridge, Top Gear 3000. It primarily helped out with drawing the race track, especially during the times that the track branched into multiple paths, which was a unique feature of this type of game at the time.

S-DD1 chip : Other than its normal processing and copy protection duties, this chip was primarily a graphics decompression chip. This allowed games to be bigger than normal by compressing the graphics data. Games that used this chip were Street Fighter Alpha 2 and Star Ocean. The game developers found it to be cheaper to add a specialized decompression chip rather than to add extra ROM space.

C4 chip: A chip created by Capcom. This chip was used to handle the wireframe effects, perform more general trigonometric calculations, and to help out with sprite positioning and rotation. The chip was used in Mega Man X2 and Mega Man X3.

SA-1 chip: This is an ASIC chipset with a 65c816 8/16-bit processor core, clocked at 10 MHz, containing some extra circuitry specified by Nintendo, including some fast RAM, a memory mapper, DMA, several programmable timers, and the region lockout chip. The SA-1 was a multipurpose chip that allowed games such as Kirby Super Star, Kirby's Dream Land 3, and Super Mario RPG to stay competitive in the changing marketplace during the aging SNES/SFC's final years.

SGB CPU chip: This chip was used only inside the Super Game Boy peripheral and possessed a core identical to the CPU in a regular handheld Game Boy. Because the Super Nintendo was not powerful enough to use software emulation to simulate the Game Boy, circuitry equivalent to an entire Game Boy had to sit inside of the cartridge. The SGB CPU ran the main program from the inserted Game Boy cartridge, but relied upon the host Super Nintendo system to write to memory mapped registers the state of the gamepad buttons and to copy out the video frame buffer. Audio from the SGB CPU was passed along two pins on the SNES cartridge connector to be mixed with the SNES audio output.

The piece of shit Turbomud-16 (2006-08-25 22:05)

Consoles Sold 5 million

The PC Engine is a video game console first released in Japan by NEC on October 30, 1987. The system was released in late August, 1989 as TurboGrafx-16 for the North American market. A PAL version of the system also saw a very limited release in the UK and continental Europe in 1990 as "Turbografx" (not including the "16" in the title, and uncapitalized "g" in "grafx").

The TurboGrafx-16 was an eight-bit system with a 16-bit graphics chip, capable of displaying 482 colors at once.

The PC Engine was a collaborative effort between Japanese software maker Hudson Soft (which maintains a chipmaking division) and NEC. Hudson was looking for financial backing for a game console they had designed, and NEC was looking to get into the lucrative game market. The PC Engine was and is a very small video game console, due primarily to a very efficient three-chip architecture and its use of HuCards, credit-card sized data cartridges. "HuCard" (Hudson Card; also referred to as "TurboChip" in North America) was derived from Hudson Soft. The cards were the size of a credit card (but slightly thicker) and thus were somewhat similar to the card format used by the Sega Master System for budget games. Unlike the Sega Master System (which also supported cartridges), however, the TurboGrafx-16 used HuCards exclusively. TG-16 featured an enhanced MOS Technology 65C02 processor and a custom 16-bit graphics processor, as well as a custom video encoder chip, all designed by Hudson. The HES logo found on the manual of every Japanese game stood for "Hudson Entertainment System".

It was the first console to have an optional CD module, allowing the standard benefits of the CD medium: more storage, cheaper media costs, and redbook audio. The efficient design, backing of many of Japan's major software producers, and the additional CD ROM capabilities gave the PC Engine a very wide variety of software, with several hundred games for both the HuCard and CD formats.

The PC Engine was extremely popular in Japan, beating Nintendo's Famicom in sales soon after its release, with no fewer than twelve systems released from 1987 to 1993. It was capable of up to 482 colors at once in several resolutions, and featured very robust sprite handling abilities. The Hudson-designed chroma encoder delivered a video signal more vibrant and colourful than both the Famicom and the Sega Mega Drive/Sega Genesis and is largely regarded as the equal to Nintendo's Super Famicom, although that system was not released until 1990.

As graphics technology improved, gamers continued to stick to the PC Engine despite its shortcomings. Erotic games were a key factor in making the PC Engine popular, and this popularity was maintained far past the lifespan of a regular video game console. New games were released for the PC Engine up until 1999.

Despite the system's success, it started to lose ground to the Super Famicom. NEC made one final effort to resuscitate the system with the release of the Arcade Card expansion, bringing the total amount of RAM up to a then-massive 2048K; many Arcade Card games were conversions of popular Neo-Geo titles. The additional memory even allowed the system to display pre-rendered 3D polygon graphics well beyond what the competing Super Famicom and Megadrive/Mega-CD could offer. By this time, however, it was too late – only a relative handful of Arcade Card games were ever produced, and the expansion was never released in the U.S.

The TurboGrafx-16 was the first video game console in North America to have a CD-ROM peripheral (following the pioneering spirit of the PC-Engine CD-ROM add-on in Japan, although the FM Towns Marty was the first console to have a built-in CD-ROM). The TurboGrafx CD debuted at a prohibitive $399.99 (and did not include a pack-in game). Monster Lair (a.k.a. Wonder Boy III: Monster Lair) and Fighting Street (a.k.a. Street Fighter) were the initial TurboGrafx-CD titles. Ys Book I & II soon followed and was instantly recognized as the "must-have" TurboGrafx-CD game (and continues to be highly regarded today). The TurboGrafx-CD catalog grew at a snail's pace compared to the library of TurboChip (HuCard) titles.

The TurboGrafx-CD came packaged in a very large box, 85 % of which was filled with protective styrofoam inserts. By some accounts, no other video game console (or peripheral) has been packaged in such an overkill manner. To be fair, though, the TurboGrafx-CD did come with a large plastic "carrying case" that could comfortably hold the TurboGrafx-16 base system, TurboGrafx-CD, all AC adapters, 2–3 controllers, and a few games.

Although the TurboGrafx-CD library was relatively small, North Americans could draw from a wide range of Japanese software since there was no region protection on TG-CD / PC Engine CD-ROM software. Many mail order (and some brick-and-mortar) import stores advertised Japanese PCE CD and HuCard titles in the video game publications of the era.

NOTE: While there was no region-protection on CD games, there were several different CD formats: CD, Super CD (SCD) and, later, Arcade CD (ACD). TurboGrafx-CD, equipped with the original System Card (version 2.01), could play all Japanese and North American CD games. TurboGrafx-CD, equipped with the updated Super System Card (version 3.01), could play all Japanese and North American SCD and CD format games. The Arcade System Cards (for playing Arcade CD titles) were never released in North America.

Rivalry with Nintendo and Sega

In North America, the TurboGrafx-16 was first released in late August of 1989, in New York and Los Angeles. Initially, the TurboGrafx was marketed as a direct competitor to the NES (Nintendo Entertainment System) and early television ads touted TG-16's superior graphics and sound. These early television ads featured a brief montage of TG-16's launch titles: Blazing Lazers, China Warrior, Vigilante, Alien Crush, etc. Of course, TG-16 was also in direct competition with the Sega Genesis, which had had its own New York/Los Angeles test-market launch two weeks prior, on August 14 (Note: the launch dates can be confusing. Part of the confusion, perhaps, lies in the fact that both TG-16 and the Genesis were first test-marketed in New York and Los Angeles, then given national launches. However, it is known that the Genesis' initial test-launch occurred two weeks prior to TG-16's[1]). The Genesis launch was accompanied by an ad campaign mocking NEC's claim that the TurboGrafx-16 was the first 16-bit console.

Another problem for the TG-16 was its limited hardware. The Genesis only came with one controller, but it provided a port for a second; the TG-16 only had one controller port. Players who wanted to take advantage of the simultaneous multiplayer modes in their games were required to buy, in addition to the necessary extra controllers, the Turbo Tap (an accessory which permitted five controllers to be plugged into the system). Another problem in the battle against the Genesis were the pack-in games (game included with purchase): The Genesis originally came with the impressive arcade translation of Altered Beast (1989), which included big, bold sprites and colors as well as impressive digital sound effects. The TG-16's initial pack-in game was Keith Courage in Alpha Zones (1989), a modest action platform game that did not show off the capabilities of the TG-16 in nearly the same way Altered Beast did for the Genesis (or Super Mario World later did for the Super Nintendo Entertainment System [SNES]).

The Genesis' Japanese counterpart, the Sega Mega Drive, was less popular than the NEC console, the PC Engine. In North America, however, the situation was reversed, and the Genesis is mainly remembered there for its rivalry with the Super Nintendo, not with the TurboGrafx-16.

Both Sega and NEC released CD peripherals (Mega-CD versus Turbo CD), color handhelds (Sega Game Gear versus TurboExpress), and even "TV Tuners" for their respective handheld systems. While Sega outperformed NEC in North America, both companies' peripherals and handhelds were not terribly popular overall.

In 1994, comic book-like ads featuring Johnny Turbo were published by TTI. The ads mocked Sega, in particular the Mega-CD. By this point it was too little too late, the TG-16 had been defeated by the Genesis in the marketplace, which was by then dominated by the battle between the Genesis and the Super Nintendo.

Ironically, many TurboGrafx-16 games are currently planned to be available with the "Virtual Console" option for Nintendo's upcoming console: Wii.

Struggles in North America

Initially, the TurboGrafx-16 sold well in North America, but it generally suffered from a lack of support from third-party software developers and publishers. One reason for this was that many larger software companies such as Konami supported the PC Engine in Japan, but also produced games for Nintendo. Nintendo at the time had engaged in anti-competitive practices that were later ruled illegal, such as enforcing exclusive contracts and punishing developers who developed for more than one system with "chip shortages" around the holiday seasons. As a result of this practice, many developers were compelled to pick the immensely popular NES over the upstart NEC console, resulting in a catch-22 for the TurboGrafx-16 — most developers would only consider taking a risk on the TG-16 if it were more popular, and yet it could not become more popular because only a handful of North American publishers would support it. Accordingly, most of the games published for the TG-16 were produced by NEC and Hudson Soft.

The TurboGrafx-16 was originally marketed by NEC Home Electronics based in Wood Dale, Illinois, a suburb of Chicago. As the system's popularity tanked, the platform was handed over to a new company called Turbo Technologies Incorporated (TTI), based in Los Angeles. This company was comprised mainly of former NEC Home Electronics and Hudson Soft employees, and it essentially took over all marketing and first-party software development for the struggling system.

Another reason for the TG-16's lack of success in North America was the system's marketing. NEC of Japan's marketing campaign for the PC Engine was mainly targeted to the largest metropolitan areas in the country. This proved to be quite successful there, but when the same kind of marketing was used in the much larger and more diverse North American market, it resulted in a lack of public awareness outside of the big cities. The TG-16 ended up being far more competitive and popular in certain local markets such as New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, while in smaller and more spread-out areas, it failed miserably.

By 1991, the Sega Genesis had clearly surpassed the TurboGrafx-16, putting NEC's console in a distant fourth place in the video game market (Nintendo held the #2 and 3 places with the brand new SNES and the aging but still potent NES). NEC, who was relatively new to the market, had an increasingly difficult time convincing consumers who already owned a Sega or Nintendo system to give the TG-16 a try.

Compounding the problem was that the vast majority of the titles that made the system so successful in Japan were produced for the CD-ROM add-on. In the American market, this add-on was difficult to find outside of large cities, and it was widely considered to be overpriced (debuting at nearly $400). TTI tried to address this issue by releasing a combination system called the TurboDuo, as well as dropping the price of the CD add-on to around $150. Unfortunately, at $300, the cost of the TurboDuo was still too steep for most American consumers, even when NEC took the bold step of including seven pack-in titles and a coupon book with the system. Despite all these efforts, the company failed to attract much of a mainstream audience.

Many of the CD games for the Turbo platform were innovative and well-received, but the cost of the add-on system was a strong deterrent to buyers, especially when the competition sold for considerably less. Some Japanese games, such as Demon Castle Dracula X: Rondo of Blood, Ys IV: The Dawn of Ys, Far East of Eden 2 and Snatcher, never made it to North American shelves.

In the handheld market, the TurboExpress further suffered from short battery life, a hefty price tag, and a large number of units that were missing pixels in their displays (due mainly to the fact that TFT LCD manufacturing technology was still in its infancy at the time).

Today, the TurboGrafx-16 is mainly known for its much-vaunted shoot 'em ups, its competition with the Sega Genesis, advertising flop Johnny Turbo, and the Bonk games. After the system died, NEC decided to concentrate on the Japanese market, where it had had much more success.

In 1994 NEC released a new console, the Japan-only PC-FX, a 32-bit system with a tower-like design; it enjoyed a small but steady stream of games until 1998, when NEC finally abandoned the video games industry. NEC would then partner with former rival Sega, providing a version of its PowerVR 2 Chipset for the Sega Dreamcast.

There is a niche collector's market for TurboGrafx games and Japanese imports, mainly centered around the system's many arcade ports of shooters. Spurring this interest is the fact that Turbo ports from the arcade tended to be closer to the original than Sega Genesis/Sega Mega Drive or NES versions, in terms of graphics and sound. Hudson Soft also released some shooters which were exclusive to the Turbo, such as Super Air Zonk, Gate of Thunder, Soldier Blade, Super Star Soldier, Star Parodia (Japan). The most famous North American shooter is probably Blazing Lasers (Gunhead in Japan) and was featured in all of the early television ads.

After the demise of TTI, Turbo Zone Direct (TZD), mail-order company, became the de facto source for new TG-16 / Duo hardware, accessories and software.

The brief "Johnny Turbo" series of advertisements have become part of gaming's pop culture. Many folks without direct experience with TG-16 consoles or its games have heard of the infamous "Johnny Turbo".

Many PC Engine/TurboGrafx-16 games will be available for download on Wii's Virtual Console download service, according to Nintendo's president Satoru Iwata. Not all games will be available; only some titles (mostly a "best hits" approach) will be selected. The number of games selected is still unknown.

NES history (2006-08-31 17:46)

Nintendo Entertainment System, or NES, is an 8-bit video game console released by Nintendo in North America, Brazil, Europe, Asia, and Australia. Its Japanese equivalent is known as the Nintendo Family Computer or Famicom. The most successful gaming console of its time in Asia and North America (Nintendo claims to have sold over 60 million NES units worldwide), it helped revitalize the video game industry following the video game crash of 1983, and set the standard for subsequent consoles in everything from game design to business practices. The NES was the first console for which the manufacturer openly courted third-party developers.

Following a series of arcade game successes in the early 1980s, Nintendo made plans to produce a cartridge-based console. Masayuki Uemura designed the system, which was released in Japan on July 15, 1983 for ¥14,800 alongside three ports of Nintendo's successful arcade games Donkey Kong, Donkey Kong Jr., and Popeye. The Nintendo Family Computer (Famicom) was slow to gather momentum: during its first year, many criticized the system as unreliable, prone to programming errors and rampant freezing. Following a product recall and a reissue with a new motherboard, the Famicom's popularity soared, becoming the best-selling game console in Japan by the end of 1984. Encouraged by their successes, Nintendo soon turned their attentions to the North American market.

Nintendo entered into negotiations with Atari to release the Famicom under Atari's name as the name "Nintendo Enhanced Video System." This deal eventually fell through. Subsequent plans to market a Famicom console in North America featuring a keyboard, cassette data recorder, wireless joystick controller, and a special BASIC cartridge under the name "Nintendo Advanced Video System" likewise never materialized. Finally, in June 1985 Nintendo unveiled its American version of the Famicom at the Consumer Electronics Show (CES). Nintendo rolled out its first systems to limited American markets on October 18, 1985, following up with a full-fledged North American release of the console in February of the following year. Nintendo simultaneously released eighteen launch titles: 10-Yard Fight, Baseball, Clu Clu Land, Donkey Kong Jr. Math, Duck Hunt, Excitebike, Golf, Gyromite, Hogan's Alley, Ice Climber, Kung Fu, Mach Rider, Pinball, Stack-Up, Super Mario Bros., Tennis, Wild Gunman, and Wrecking Crew.

In Europe and Australasia, the system was released to two separate marketing regions (A and B). Distribution in region B, consisting of most of mainland Europe (excluding Italy), was handled by a number of different companies, with Nintendo responsible for most cartridge releases; most of region B saw a 1986 release. Mattel handled distribution for region A, consisting of the United Kingdom, Ireland, Italy, Australia and New Zealand, starting the following year. Not until 1990 did Nintendo's newly created European branch take over distribution throughout Europe. Despite the system's lackluster performance outside of Japan and North America, by 1990 the NES had become the best-selling console in video game history.

As the 1990s dawned, however, renewed competition from technologically superior systems such as the 16-bit Sega Mega Drive (known as the Sega Genesis in North America) marked the end of the NES's dominance. Eclipsed by Nintendo's own Super Nintendo Entertainment System (SNES), the NES's user base gradually waned. Nintendo continued to support the system in America through the first half of the decade, even releasing a new version of the console, the NES 2, to address many of the design flaws in the original NES hardware. By 1995, though, in the wake of ever decreasing sales and the lack of new software titles, Nintendo of America officially discontinued the NES. Despite this, Nintendo of Japan kept producing new Nintendo Famicoms for a niche market up until October 2003, when Nintendo of Japan officially discontinued the line. Even as developers ceased production for the NES, a number of high-profile video game franchises and series for the NES were transitioned to newer consoles and remain popular to this day. Nintendo's own Super Mario Bros., The Legend of Zelda, and Metroid franchises began life on the NES, as did Capcom's Mega Man franchise, Konami's Castlevania series, and Square Enix's Dragon Quest and Final Fantasy franchises.

In the years following the official "death" of the NES in the west, a collector's market based around video rental shops, garage sales and flea markets led some gamers to rediscover the NES. Coupled with the growth of console emulation, the late 1990s saw something of a second golden age for the NES. The secondhand market began to dry up after 2000, and finding ROMs no longer represented the challenge it had in the past. Parallel to the rise of interest in emulation was the emergence of a dedicated NES hardware "modding" scene. Such hobbyists perform tasks such as moving the NES to a completely new case, or just dissecting it for parts or fun. The controllers are particular targets for modding, often being adapted to connect with personal computers by way of a parallel or USB port. Some NES modders have transformed the console into a portable system by adding AA batteries and an LED or LCD screen.

For its North American release, the NES was released in two different configurations, or "bundles." The console deck itself was identical, but each bundle was packaged with different Game Paks and accessories. The first of these sets, the Control Deck, retailed from US $199.99, and included the console itself, two game controllers, and a Super Mario Bros. game pak. The second bundle, the Deluxe Set, retailed for $249.99 and consisted of the console, a R.O.B., an NES Zapper, and two game paks: Duck Hunt and Gyromite.

For the remainder of the NES's commercial lifespan in North America, Nintendo frequently repackaged the console in new configurations to capitalize on newer accessories or popular game titles. Subsequent bundle packages included the NES Action Set, released in November 1988 for $199.99, which replaced both of the earlier two sets, and included the console, the NES Zapper, two game controllers, and a multicart version of Super Mario Bros. and Duck Hunt. The Action Set became the most successful of the packages released by Nintendo. In December 1990, to coincide with the release of the Power Pad floor mat controller, Nintendo released a new Power Set bundle, consisting of the console, the Power Pad, the NES Zapper, two controllers, and a multicart containing Super Mario Bros., Duck Hunt, and World Class Track Meet.[12] That same month, a Sports Set bundle was released, including the console, an NES Satellite infrared wireless multitap adaptor, four game controllers, and a multicart featuring Super Spike V'Ball and Nintendo World Cup.

Two more bundle packages were released using the original model NES console. The Challenge Set, which included the console, two controllers, and a Super Mario Bros. 3 game pak, and the Basic Set, which included only the console and two controllers with no pack-in cartridge. Finally, the redesigned NES 2 was released as part of the final Nintendo-released bundle package, once again under the name Control Deck, including the new style NES 2 console, and two redesigned "dogbone" game controllers. Released in October 1993, this final bundle retailed for $49.99, and remained in production until the discontinuation of the NES in 1995.

Although the Japanese Famicom and the international NES included essentially the same hardware, there were certain key differences between the two systems:

Different case design. The Famicom featured a top-loading cartridge slot, a 15-pin expansion port located on the unit's front panel for accessories (as the controllers were hard-wired to the back of the console), and a red and white color scheme. The NES featured a front-loading cartridge slot (often jokingly compared to a toaster), and a more subdued gray, black and red color scheme. An expansion port was found on the bottom of the unit, and the cartridge connector pinout was changed.

60-pin vs. 72-pin cartridges. The original Famicom and the re-released AV Family Computer both utilized a 60-pin cartridge design, which resulted in smaller cartridges than the NES (and the NES 2), which utilized a 72-pin design. Four pins were used for the 10NES lockout chip. Ten pins were added that connected a cartridge directly to the expansion port on the bottom of the unit. Finally, two pins that allowed cartridges to provide their own sound expansion chips were removed, a regrettable decision. Many early games (such as StackUp) released in North America were simply Famicom cartridges attached to an adapter (such as the T89 Cartridge Converter) to allow them to fit inside the NES hardware. Nintendo did this to reduce costs and inventory by using the same cartridge boards in America and Japan. A number of peripheral devices and software packages were released in for the Famicom. Few of these devices were ever released outside of Japan.

- o Famicom Disk System (FDS). Although not included with the original system, a popular floppy disk drive peripheral was released for the Famicom in Japan only. Nintendo never released the Famicom Disk System outside of Japan, citing concerns about software bootlegging. Notable games released for the FDS include Doki Doki Panic, a special edition of Metroid, and the original Super Mario Bros. 2.

- o Famicom BASIC was an implementation of BASIC for the Famicom. It allowed the user to program his or her own games. Many programmers got their first experience on programming for the console this way.

- o Famicom MODEM was a modem that allowed connection to a Nintendo server which provided content such as jokes, news (mainly about Nintendo), game tips, weather reports for Japan and allowed a small number of programs to be downloaded.

External sound chips. The Famicom had two cartridge pins that allowed cartridges to provide external sound enhancements. They were originally intended to facilitate the Famicom Disk System's external sound chip. These pins were removed from the cartridge port of the NES, and relocated to the bottom expansion port. As a result, individual cartridges could not make use of this functionality, and many NES localizations suffered from inferior sound compared to their equivalent Famicom versions. Castlevania III: Dracula's Curse is a notable example of this problem.

Hardwired controllers. The Famicom's original design includes hardwired, non-removable controllers. In addition, the second controller featured an internal microphone for use with certain games. Both the controllers and the microphone were subsequently dropped from the redesigned AV Famicom in favor of the two seven-pin controller ports on the front panel used in the NES from its inception.

Lockout circuitry. The Famicom contained no lockout hardware, and, as a result, unlicensed cartridges (both legitimate and bootleg) were extremely common throughout Japan and the Far East. The original NES (but not the top-loading NES 2) contained the 10NES lockout chip, which significantly increased the challenges faced by unlicensed developers. Tinkerers at home in later years discovered that disassembling the NES and cutting the fourth pin of the lockout chip (a process now legal with the expiration of the NES patent) would cut power to the chip, removing all effects and greatly improving the console's ability to play legal games, as well as bootlegs and converted imports. The European release of the console used a regional lockout system that prevented cartridges released in region A from being played on region B consoles, and vice versa.

Audio/video output. The original Famicom featured an RF modulator plug for audio/video output, while the original NES featured both an RF modulator and RCA composite output cables. The AV Famicom featured only RCA composite output, and the top-loading NES featured only RF modulator output.

The game controller used for the both the NES and Famicom featured a brick-like design with a simple four button layout: two round buttons labelled "B" and "A," a "Start" button, and a "Select" button. Additionally, the controllers utilized the cross-shaped D-pad, designed by Nintendo employee Gunpei Yokoi for Nintendo Game & Watch systems, to replace the bulkier joysticks on earlier gaming consoles' controllers.

The original model Famicom featured two game controllers, both of which were hardwired to the back of the console. The second controller lacked the "Start" and "Select" buttons, but featured a small microphone. Relatively few games made use of this feature. The earliest produced Famicom units initially had squared A and B buttons. This was changed to the circular designs because of the square buttons being caught in the controller casing when pressed down. The NES dropped the hardwired controllers, instead featuring two custom 7-pin ports on the front of the console. Also in contrast to the Famicom, the controllers included with the NES were identical to each other—the second controller lacked the microphone that was present on the Famicom model, and possessed the same "Start" and "Select" buttons as the primary controller.

A number of special controllers designed for use with specific games were released for the system, though very few such devices proved particularly popular. Such devices included, but were not limited to, the NES Zapper (a light gun), the Power Pad, and the ill-fated R.O.B. and Power Glove. The original Famicom featured a deepened DA-15 expansion port on the front of the unit, which was used to connect most auxiliary devices. On the NES, these special controllers were generally connected to one of the two control ports on the front of the unit.

Near the end of the NES's lifespan, upon the release of the AV Famicom and the top-loading NES 2, the design of the game controllers was modified slightly. Though the original button layout was retained, the redesigned device abandoned the "brick" shell in favor of a "dog bone" shape reminiscent of the controllers of the Super Nintendo Entertainment System. In addition, the AV Famicom joined its international counterpart and dropped the hardwired controllers in favor of detachable controller ports. However, the controllers included with the Famicom AV, despite being the "dog bone" type, had cables which were a short three feet long, as opposed to the standard six feet of NES controllers.

In recent years the original NES controller has become one of the most recognizable symbols of the system. Nintendo has mimicked the look of the controller in several recent products, from promotional merchandise to limited edition versions of the Game Boy Advance SP and Game Boy Micro handheld game consoles.

When Nintendo released the NES in the United States, the design styling was deliberately different from that of other game consoles. Nintendo wanted to distinguish their product from those of competitors, and to avoid the generally poor reputation that game consoles had acquired following the video game crash of 1983. One result of this philosophy was a front-loading zero insertion force (ZIF) cartridge socket designed to resemble the front-loading mechanism of a VCR.

Problems with the 10NES lockout chip frequently resulted in the system's most infamous problem: the blinking red power light, in which the system appears to turn itself on and off repeatedly. The lockout chip was quite finicky, requiring precise timing in order to permit the system to boot. Dirty, aging, and bent connectors would oftentimes disrupt the timing, resulting in the blink effect. User attempts to solve this problem ranged from blowing air onto the cartridge connectors to slapping the side of the system after inserting a cartridge.

Nintendo's near monopoly on the home video game market left it with a degree of influence over the industry exceeding even that of Atari during its heyday in the early 1980s. Many of Nintendo's business practices during this period were heavily criticized, and may have played some role in the erosion of Nintendo's market share throughout the 1990s. Unlike Atari, who never actively courted third-party developers, and went so far as to go to court to attempt to force Activision to cease production of Atari 2600 games, Nintendo had anticipated and encouraged the involvement of third-party software developers—strictly on Nintendo's terms. To this end, a 10NES authentication chip was placed in every console, and in every officially licensed cartridge. If the console's chip could not detect a counterpart chip inside the cartridge, the game would not be loaded.

Referred as "inventory management" by Nintendo of America public relations executive Peter Main, Nintendo would refuse to fill all retailer orders. Retailers, many of whom derived a large percentage of their profit from sales of Nintendo-based hardware and software (at one point, Toys "R" Us reported 17 % of its sales and 22 % of its profits were from Nintendo merchandise), could do little to stop these practices. In 1988, over 33 million NES cartridges were sold in the United States, but estimates suggest that the realistic demand was closer to 45 million. Because Nintendo controlled the production of all cartridges, they were able to enforce these rules on their third-party developers. Following the introduction of Sega's Mega Drive/Genesis, Nintendo began to face real competition in the industry, and in the early 1990s was forced to reevaluate its stance towards its developers, many of whom had begun to defect to other systems. When the console was reissued as the NES 2, the 10NES chip was omitted from the console, marking the end of Nintendo's most notorious hold over its third-party developers.

A thriving market of unlicensed NES hardware clones emerged during the heyday of the console's popularity. Initially, such clones were popular in markets where Nintendo never issued a legitimate version of the system. In particular, the Dendy, an unlicensed hardware clone produced in Russia and other nations of the former Soviet Union, emerged as the most popular video game console of its time in that setting, and enjoyed a degree of fame roughly equivalent to the that experienced by the NES/Famicom in North America and Japan. The unlicensed clone market has persisted, and even flourished, following Nintendo's discontinuation of the NES. As the NES fades into memory, many such systems have adopted case designs which mimic more recent game consoles. NES clones resembling the Sega Genesis, the Super Nintendo Entertainment System, and even current systems like the Nintendo GameCube, the Sony PlayStation 2 and the Microsoft Xbox have been produced. Some of the more exotic of these systems have gone beyond the functionality of the original hardware, and have included variations such as a portable system with a color LCD (e.g. Pocket Famicom). Others have been produced with certain specialized markets in mind, including various "educational computer packages" which include copies of some of the NES's educational titles and come complete with a clone of the Famicom BASIC keyboard, transforming the system into a rather primitive personal computer.

As was the case with unlicensed software titles, Nintendo has typically gone to the courts to prohibit the manufacture and sale of unlicensed cloned hardware. Many of the clone vendors have included built-in copies of licensed Nintendo software, which constitutes copyright infringement in most countries. As recently as 2004, Nintendo of America has filed suits against manufacturers of the Power Player Super Joy III, an NES clone system that had been sold in North America, Europe, and Australia.

Although most hardware clones were not produced under license by Nintendo, one exception is the Twin Famicom, produced by Sharp Corporation. The Twin Famicom was compatible with both Famicom cartridges and Famicom Disk System disks. It was available in two colors (red and black) and used similar hardwired controllers to the original Famicom, but featured a different case design.

Technical specifications

Dimensions

o North America:

+ 'toaster' version: 10" width x 8" length x 2.5" height (note that when open, the door over the cartridge slot goes another 1" high)

+ toploader version: 6" width x 7" length x 1 1/2" height

+ cartridge: 5.5" length x 4.1" width

o Japan:

+ cartridge: 3" length x 5.3" width

CPU: Ricoh 8-bit processor based on MOS Technology 6502 core, custom sound hardware, and a restricted DMA controller on-die

o Region differences

+ NTSC version, named RP2A03, runs at 1.79 MHz; this CPU was also used in PlayChoice-10 and Nintendo Vs. Series

+ PAL version, named RP2A07, runs at 1.66 MHz

o Main RAM: 2 KiB plus expanded RAM if present on the cartridge

o ROM: Up to 49128 bytes (just shy of 48 KiB) for ROM, expanded RAM, and cartridge I/O; bank switching can expand this by orders of magnitude

o Audio: Five sound channels

+ 2 pulse-wave channels, variable duty cycle (25 %, 50 %, 75 %, 87.5 %), 16-level volume control, hardware pitch-bend support, supporting frequencies from 54 Hz to 28 kHz.

- + 1 triangle-wave channel, fixed volume, supporting frequencies from 27 Hz to 56 kHz
- + 1 white-noise channel, 16-level volume control, supporting two modes (by adjusting inputs on a linear feedback shift register) at 16 preprogrammed frequencies
- + 1 delta pulse-code modulation (DPCM) channel with 6 bits of range, using 1-bit delta encoding at 16 preprogrammed sample rates from 4.2 kHz to 33.5 kHz, also capable of playing standard PCM sound by writing individual 7-bit values at timed intervals.
- Picture processing unit (PPU): Ricoh custom-made video processor
 - o Regional differences
 - + NTSC version, named RP2C02, runs at 5.37 MHz and outputs composite video
 - + PAL version, named RP2C07, runs at 5.32 MHz and outputs composite video
 - + PlayChoice-10 version, named RP2C03, runs at 5.37 MHz and outputs RGB video (at NTSC frequencies)
 - + Nintendo Vs. Series versions, named RP2C04 and RP2C05, run at 5.37 MHz and output RGB video (at NTSC frequencies) using irregular palettes to prevent easy ROM swapping of games
 - o Palette: 48 colors and 5 grays in base palette; red, green, and blue can be individually darkened at specific screen regions using carefully timed code.
 - o Onscreen colors: 25 colors on one scanline (background color + 4 sets of 3 tile colors + 4 sets of 3 sprite colors), not including color de-emphasis
 - o Hardware-supported sprites
 - + Maximum onscreen sprites: 64 (without reloading sprites mid-screen)
 - + Sprite sizes: 8×8 or 8×16 pixels (selected globally for all sprites)
 - + Maximum number of sprites on one scanline: 8, using a flag to indicate when additional sprites are dropped (to allow the software to rotate sprite priorities, causing flicker)
 - o PPU internal memory: 256 bytes of on-die sprite position/attribute RAM ("OAM") and 28 bytes of on-die palette RAM (allowing for selection of background and sprite colors) on separate buses internal to the PPU
 - o PPU external memory (Video RAM): 2 KiB of RAM for tile maps and attributes on the NES board and 8 KiB of tile pattern ROM or RAM on the cartridge (with bankswitching, virtually any amount can be used within manufacture cost)
 - o Scrolling layers: 1 layer, though horizontal scrolling can be changed on a per-scanline basis (as can vertical scrolling via more advanced programming methods)
 - o Display resolution: 256×240 pixels, though NTSC games usually used only 256×224, as the top and bottom 8 scanlines are not visible on most television sets (see overscan); for additional video memory bandwidth, it was possible to turn off the screen before the raster reached the very bottom.
 - o Video output
 - + Original NES: RCA composite output and RF modulator output
 - + Original Famicom (Japan) and NES 2: RF modulator output only
 - + AV Famicom: Composite video output only, via a Nintendo proprietary 12-pin "multi out" connector first introduced for the Super Famicom/SNES.
 - + PlayChoice 10: inverted RGB video output

The History of Sega Masters (worse 8-bit mainstream console) (2006-08-31 20:11)

The Sega Master System (SMS for short) is an 8-bit cartridge-based gaming console that was manufactured by Sega. Its original Japanese incarnation was the SG-1000 Mark III. In the European market, this console launched Sega onto a competitive level comparable to Nintendo, due to its wider availability, but failed to put a dent in the North American and Japanese markets. The Master System was released as a direct competitor to the NES/Famicom. The system ultimately failed to topple its Nintendo competitor, but has enjoyed over a decade of life in secondary markets, especially Brazil.

The SG-1000 Mark III came after the SG-1000 Mark I and SG-1000 Mark II. It was released in Japan on October 20, 1985. Typical of the era, game consoles had a mascot character, Sega Master Systems's being Alex Kidd.

The system was redesigned and sold in the United States under the name Sega Master System in June 1986, the year after the Nintendo Entertainment System was released. The console sold for $200. The Master System was subsequently released in other locales and markets, including a second release in Japan in 1987 under the new Master System name.

Though the Master System was a more technically advanced piece of hardware than the NES, it did not attain the same level of popularity among consumers in the United States. Its lack of success in the U.S. has been attributed to various causes, among them the difference in game titles available for each platform and the slightly later release date of the Master System. The licensing agreement that Nintendo had with its third-party game developers had a profound impact. The agreement stated, in effect, that developers would exclusively produce games for the NES. The Master System sold 125,000 consoles in the first four months. In the same period, the NES would net 2,000,000.

Nintendo had 90 % of the North American market at the time. Hayao Nakayama, then CEO of Sega, decided not to use too much effort to market the console in the NES-dominated market. In 1988, the rights to the Master System in North America were sold to Tonka, but its popularity continued to decline. The move was considered a very bad one, since Tonka had never marketed a video game system and had no idea what to do with it.

In 1990, Sega was having success with its Sega Mega Drive/Sega Genesis and as a result took back the rights from Tonka for the SMS. They designed the Sega Master System II, a newer console which was smaller and sleeker but which, to keep production costs low, lacked the reset button and card slot of the original. In an effort to counter Nintendo's Super Mario Brothers the new system would include a built-in Alex Kidd in Miracle World, or later Sonic the Hedgehog, playable without any cartridges. Sega did everything in its power to market the system, but nothing came out of it.

By 1992, the Master System's sales were virtually nonexistent in North America and sales in this market ceased. Sales were poor in Japan as well, due to the dominance of the main competitor from Nintendo, the Nintendo Family Computer (Famicom).

In Europe, Sega marketed the Master System in many countries, including several in which Nintendo did not sell its consoles. It had some success in Germany, where it was distributed by Ariolasoft since Winter 1987. The Europeans had garnered lots of third party support for the SMS and as a result, it was able to outsell the NES in Europe. Nintendo was forced to get licensing for some popular SMS titles in that market. The Master System was supported until 1996 in Europe. It was discontinued so that Sega could concentrate on the new Sega Saturn console. Sales of the SMS in Australia were not as strong as the NES enjoyed there, however the SMS was able to gain greater market share than it had in North America[citation needed]. However in New Zealand it was largely successful - due to NES having a weak influence - and was supported until 1997.

Brazil was one of the SMS' most successful markets. It was marketed in that country by Tec Toy, Sega's Brazilian distributor. A Sega Master System III (and even a semi-portable SMS VI) had been released in that market and several games had been translated into Portuguese. The characters in the said games had been modified so that they appealed to Brazilian mainstream audiences (for example, Wonder Boy in Monster Land featured Mônica, the main character from a popular children's comic book in Brazil, created by Maurício de Sousa). Brazil also produced 100 % national titles, like Sítio do Pica Pau Amarelo (based on Monteiro Lobato workmanship) and Castelo Ra-Tim-Bum (from TV Cultura series). Brazil was also where the first several Sonic the Hedgehog Game Gear titles started out. Tails, one of the characters, made his worldwide debut in Sonic the Hedgehog 2 for the Master System. That title would later be ported to the Game Gear in other markets.

The most notable Master System step in Brazil was the compact 100 % wireless system developed by Tec Toy. The console transmit the A/V signal in radio frequency, dispensing cable connections. It was produced from 1994 to 1997 and is still a target for console collectors.

Later in its life in Brazil, Game Gear games had been ported to the Master System and several original Brazilian titles were made for the system. Tec Toy also produced a licensed version of the wildly popular fighting game Street Fighter II for the Master System. Despite the limitations of the console, the game turned out to be fairly well received. The console production was familiar to the Brazilians, which explains the success in that market.

The Sega Master System is still being produced in Brazil. The latest version is the "Master System III Collection". It uses the same design as the North American Master System II (Master System III in Brazil), but is white and comes in three versions: one with 74 games built-in, other with 105 games built-in and another with 112 games built-in on an internal ROM. However, in Brazil it is hard to find the 3D Glasses, the Light Phaser and even cartridges, leaving most Brazilians with only built-in games.

Overall, the SMS was mildly successful worldwide, but failed to capture the Japanese and North American markets. Sega learned from its mistakes and made the succeeding Sega Mega Drive/Sega Genesis wildly popular in Europe, Brazil, and North America.

Sega Master System game controller was considered extremely durable. However, there were only 2 buttons, one of which additionally performed the function of the traditional "Start" button; The pause button was on the game console itself. The original controllers, like Sega's previous systems, had the cord emerging from the side; at some later point they changed to the now-typical top emerging cord. When the game Street Fighter II was released (in Brazil only), a new six-button model similar to the Sega Mega Drive controller was also released. The current Brazilian Master System consoles come with two of those six-button controllers.

CPU: 8-bit Zilog Z80A

- o 3.54 MHz for PAL/SECAM, 3.57 MHz for NTSC

Graphics: VDP (Video Display Processor) derived from Texas Instruments TMS9918

SNES emulation | converted to AuToV Vorbis beta 4b (2006-09-04 15:59)

I found a way to emulate SNES and Genesis without the CD on PS2!

You need

- Action Replay Max
- any FAT32 formatted USB Thumb drive
- new files at [url]<http://people.freenet.de/ps2dev/emulators.html>[/url]
- a common ROM you play in Windows emulators

Oh yea, I used converted my MP3 collection to AuToV Vorbis beta 4b which is suppose to sound better then regular vorbis and won a hydrogenforums.com 64 kbps autio test. This is after I spent the day converting to normal vorbis (12/05). It sounds good, but the VBR makes the files larger then AAC (*.mp4) without VBR. Backed the collection up on 3 DVD5s. My OS is getting sluggish. I should format soon.

Went to Myth in Maplewood Minnesota to see Armin Van Buuren live (2006-09-08 10:38)

Figured out Neo Geo Emulation (2006-09-08 16:26)

From my PC.

Today, I figured out how to run NeoRage X. When I downloaded Pulstar in RAR...I had to recompress it in ZIP than add it to ROM folder. Change the setting to USA region and the system to console.

Also I called HiScore and the clerk said Neo Geo was $300 and the Neo Geo CD was $150. Samuri Showdown II and Pulstar and Final Fury were over $100. So I was like nah. Too expensive...i gonna emulate it to save my saving account from bankruptcy. Doing it is smart because I'll never see these games in my life time.....

Serial for NeoRage X 4.8

What sucks about life is if I call up the game store and ask them if anyones want my 2 GB Rom collection for de-count...the answer will be "no thanks". That's Neo-Geo, C64, Genesis, SNES, NES, Amiga, Turbografx-16, N64, arcade (like Mars Matrix, Zero Gunner, Trigon, rayforce, darius plus, Batsugun gigawing, and all the shoot em ups) and Gameboy Advance. I can't stand around and make friends and I got little money to spend on girlfriends (who needs 'em - got computers dude)

Today is Sunday and well I've been working on Xenosaga Episode III. I'm at the part where I have to save Shion from the U-TIC on Milsha.

And how about them MN Twins. Loose a game in the 10th (against Detroit Tigers) and win their last game against the White Soxs working on Dependant. I can not make it pass the 5th inning. I got too tired due to that Xenosaga Episode 3 for 5 hrs straight. Actually a good turn-based RPG. The prerendered cutscenes is state-of-the-art, but the voice-overs suck! Play a little. Then load of cutscenes. Play a little. Then load of Cutscenes

Randy or Bob won't talk to me because I gave Randy all my MP3s, Suse 10, some Roms, Open Office on several DVDs and I gave bob 4/5 of the HE-AAC collection on a DVD. Randy doesn't fully understand what GPL means. My ex-friends hate Linux distros. I understand this very well. I made a mistake giving Randy those DVDs.

Now, it looks like I'm getting a job interview at Circuit City of all places. I get to touch computers now (which got me fired at Assurant)! Actually it's a step below the tape library job, but I'm not complaining.

I was going to buy Paper Mario, but ended up buying Brave Fencer Musashi instead. It is a early Playstation RPG by Squaresoft released along with Xenogears. I am starting to forget about Panzer Dragoon Saga. Out of my reach, rarer then heck, and overrated. In 1998, no one gave a shit. 2006, it's #1 collectable game.

My PS3 discussion from gaming forum (2006-09-25 18:21)

Here is some recycled quotes I typed up because I don't feel like typing up all that covered information. Hope you like....

Sorry, but i went thru this and looked at every 10 threads, got lazy and tried to find the end....its loooooonnnnnngggg! And you guys changed the appearance since last time...and it looks a lot better!

If I don't want to load * ...I turn all the images off in Firefox preferences so the loading times do not bother me...it's lightning fast on my PC!

I don't want to sound like a rabid 360 fanboy but I'm really getting PSX-N64 feelings from this. Really, if MS makes pricecut (and they WILL make it)...Even if it's just 50 $...350 premium vs. 600 PS3.

Well, A:

You could buy both of them and be two fanboys. PS2 got into the Ginneius Book of World Records so it's a good time to be a Sony fanboy. Problem with the Ginneius Book of World Records is Super Mario Bros Deluxe for Gameboy is the best selling game so stating you know.....Nintendo is. Not to mention that Dual Screen is beating PSP even if PSP is better (cos it emulates everything 32-bit and below). You can run your NES, SNES, GBA Roms on PSP so that makes PSP unofficially backwards compatible with 30 platforms. And not only can you emulate games, You can run Frozen Bubble and Super Tux on it (two open source community favorites)

When you have as many roms as I do, PSP is the portable handheld of choice!

I don't want to talk about it because PSP pwns Dual Screen (unless your playing New Super Mario Bros. or Brain Age or Castlevania Dawn of Sorrow) DoS is suppose to be the best handheld Castlevania ever made. New Super Mario Bros is of course brilliant and Brian Age is for noobies who don't game on.

Oblivion is a perfect example of a game that looks to see if there is a hard drive and caches the game and a built in Wi Fi which in turn only benefits them and them only with PSP connectivity

I agree because a.) Xbox 360 runs Windows and B.) PC runs Windows. What whatever game on PC uses the HDD.

I agree, I have a Gameboy Player with 15 GBA games and I never use the GBA link cable to play GBA games on TV. I use the controller because I can't afford AAA batteries. I'm sort of not that rich.

I miss the old thread, ssssssoooooooooo much has changed since I was last here.

I agree. Catharton Electronica had 10,000 threads and the forum crashed and currupted. I had 4,520 posts and now i am stuck with 350. Doesn't that make you feel *ty inside!

It was my understanding that the 20GB PS3 doesn't have an HDMI output, but the 60GB PS3 doe

Sweet, if I have $600 someday I am buying a PS3! It's one of my dreams to be there on launch day and get a PS3.....

eople, who don't own a HDMI input HDTV and have absolutely no intention of buying one in the near future

We're human. Some of us have normal IQs okay. Our species can barely go to the moon meaning if there is games that look pretty + involve space travel, futuristic landscapes were Human-kind is off Earth in my life time...* I'll pay anything so i can pretend see it and broaden my human imagination. Yea, I'm talking about Halo, Xenosaga, Star Ocean 3, Prey, Half-life 2, Battlefield 2142, and all that good ****.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but the biggest official HDD for the 360 is 20GB. Right?

40 GB HDD when PS3 comes out. IGN confirmed it. The problem is PS3 has PS2 games (4 GB +) on it's hard drive and Xbox 360 just has game demos (a lot less space) And trust me, you are not going to listen to 1 GB of wma in one setting (if you're like me, you only listen to 64MB of mp3s in one setting off thumb drive)

Xbox 360 has WMA10 which is as good as year old [h]igh [e]fficently [a]dvanced [a]udio [c]oding (suppose to sound transparent at 64 kbps).

Anything FAT32 HDD can connect to 360's USB port and that can be a lot lot more so remember that.

If Sony had put all of its eggs in one basket, by only offering the $599 system, a lot of people, who have no intention of spending $600 on a game console and/or no intention of gaming or playing movies in 1080p, would leave the PS3 on the shelves. It may adversely affect the resolution of the games produced, but I don't expect that to be an issue as time goes on and more people own the HDMI enabled PS3 (or a possible converter for the Core system - I don't know how you would convert a high bandwidth, 1080p digital signal to analog and then back to a high bandwidth, 1080p digital signal) and an HD display that can receive a 1080p signal. The first gen games on a console are not nearly as great, graphically, as subsequent gens of games, anyway.

I feel so sorry for Super Nintendo now. Back in old school times when we played games till they wore out or got so dirty they wouldn't work anymore. I haven't played my old school game collection in ages. You need to appreciate them for the year and not the technology. But of course, SNES was the fad when it came out because no 32-bit CPUs were cost efficient enough for everybody to enjoy Quake or enjoy polygon graphics. Now I am hearing that polygons are obsolete and Wii and PS3 use the successor to the polygon, NURBs, used in [C]omputer [A]ided [D]esign programs.

....Back to the high definition 21 century world of today. sigh

I used to the standard PS2 DVD player for over a year.

My PS2 DVD player makes a annoying very low bitrate interference sound once in a while so i used something else.

i think that the 360 will outsell the ps3

Well, I heard the "Two Good ones for one Bad one" way to often from one of my mates. I see people here already know the price of PS3 so yea.

Dreamcast is better then anything that came out after it.

Why? I have everything since 09/09/99, and I say it isn't true. It had a blasted 640x480 which is the resolution of your color tv you may used for Super Nintendo. Sure, Soul Calibur was a great game, but Halo and Metal Gear Solid 2 pwn Soul Calibur. Dreamcast didn't have the greatest sports game known to man! (the only good American football game on the market...hint hint.) Fine, so it had NFL 2k1 and NFL 2k2 from clever game studio Visual Concepts and I agree it looked better then Madden 99. Madden is still the best selling American sports game ever!

Do you think the ps3 will heat easily like the 360?

Heck yeah! I seen the Xenon CPU at Wikipedia or Google Images. The Cell Broadband Engine is approx the same size and unless it's totally exterressial in origin it'll heat up just as much.....

I just have to say, I own a PS, and a PS2 and have no intention of buying a PS3.

I have 42 PS, and 110 PS2 games and I still hope i afford one in 1 year so i can be cool. I was being a bit too cool with PS2 i believe. I doubt my wallet or bank account will survive a PS3 investment (unless I sell my truck and buy a Honda or Victory motorcycle That never will happen because you know how many insane drivers are on the freeway now-a-days. Assholes are all going 85 mph! I value my life thank you very much!)

Microsoft and Sony are jumping the gun on the technology because most people don't want to replace all of there DVD's considering we all just replaced all of our VHS with DVD's LOL

That's not why DVDs became popular. 700 MB CDs became way too limited. Heck, even 700 MB "3M Black Watch" 940e tape drives are obsolete forcing the government and hardware manufactures to go DVD anyways. It's by far the cheapest way to store 8.5 GB. US Government knew this so the DVD specs were created. Possible ways of Government usage would be the National Film Vault, Washington DC National Library (were it has a encyclopedia as large as Wikipedia.com in terms of terabytes of used storage)

MPEG2 was invented for use of satellite TV since 1994 when DirecTV was a new company with their main product, mini-dish technology. Before, analogue dishes had to be big enough to pick up satellite signals and turn to receive different satellites' signals whereas the mini-dish picks up 1 satellite for all the digital channels.

Fox News Channel seems to achieve video on DVD. Without DVD, News channels like Fox couldn't achieve old newscasts or war footage because of the high-resolution quality of all its footage without using Betamax.

Have a look around megagames now and then because they have huge write ups on consoles that they pull from magazines and conferences all the time and they update alot..

I've been there. They have a big selection of freeware like Home of the Underdogs. Also I like their trainer selection. It saved my ass a bunch of times.

Best: Nintendo wii

Second best: Play Station 3

Third best: Dreamcast

Fourth best: Xbox 360

Fifth best: Play Station 2

Sixth best :Xbox

I believe the only reason why Dreamcast is on the list is Sega just had to be on the list and it'd be silly to have the last good Sega console, Genesis/Mega Drive, because those consoles all compute polygons, not sprites or Winamp's Visualization graphics....what are those anyways?

Sony comes out and says, "Yeah, Microsoft is probably going to come out on top PS3 is suppose to be Sony's primary Blu-ray player (one of the cheapest). It is a tool they'll use to make Bluray popular. The last thing they want is it to go Betamax on them! Every Blu-ray players besides PS3 will cost $800+.

you wont ever see the statement Online GAMING is free

Except on PC, where online gaming originated.....think way back to Diablo by Blizzard North..or Quake I. Closed battlenet must be the oldest public online gaming server in existence...at least i think so....(1996 - Present)

I also like how you think Nintendo games are kiddy, when Nintendo has released games like Resident Evil 4 and MGS The Twin Snakes

MGS The Twin Snakes is a hit or miss, but Resident Evil 4 has the best graphics, sound, gameplay, state-of-the-art cinematic, creepy as hell atmosphere, and used 99.99 % of the Gekko, ATI Flipper, and 24 MB of 1T-SDRAM combined. I was speechless and asked myself....is this game for Gamecube? I thought i was seeing Xbox graphics there for a moment which is a complement for Nintendo...I usually don't agree with gamecube (i own one, but i choose not to like Nintendo which is why i am on this forum).

It is unlikely that more space than dvd9 will be needed.

Yeah, I heard developers think compression is evil somewhere before. They want to be sloppy with compression and Xbox 360 forces them to be efficient....means more work and game developers only get paid so much! Bink Video is popular because its SDK is free.

Gears of war doesn't look that good

Yeah, I agree. It's not a DirectX 10 game or for the DirectX 10 G80 core powered Geforce 8800.

Too Human was a good example of that. It was a game that the Xbox community was raving over before E3, but then it fell off the radar completely once the playable demo was shown.

Too Human looks like a rehashed Halo, Star Trek Borg inspired. They wanted it to look like a borg cube in ST: The Next Generation or First Contact or modeled after Borg Cubes in Star Trek Voyager. That's where they got their ideas from.

Wait..they got their ideas from Star Trek Elite Force and Elite Force II because it involves the Borg and the Voyager crew. Yeah, that's it! It makes perfect sense because it looks a little like Elite Force II!

Snake isn't 60 in MGS4...it's a common misconception.

MGS2 takes place in 2007 and MGS4 takes place in 2020s. Snake looks 30 - 35 so in 2007 so he must be between 48 - 53 in 2025.

I would love to see that game in action and see what it is that PS3 can do that others cannot

There is a rumor that Metal Gear Solid 4 will be also on PC like Metal Gear Solid 2 was. It's not confirmed yet. It's true the PC version could look superior to the Xbox version.

the PS3 has the ability to play HD movies and games the 360 does not Xbox 360s coming out a year after PS3 will have an internal HD-DVD drive, and the 360 has that IDE DVD-ROM drive sized external HD-DVD drive. It's taller than Wii!

but everyone shouldn't have to try to be all neutral in regards to what console they like the most.

For me, I was loyal N64 fan, then loyal DC fan up to 2001, then loyal Gamecube fan up to 2003, Loyal PS2 fan till present, and slightly less loyal Xbox fan since 2003 (since I bought Xbox and PS2 within 3 weeks of one another), but different Xbox 360 fan. No body can deny 360 is bad because it is cool to have one.

You have to realize that, PS3's and 360's architectures are very different

Oh yeah...both Power PC architecture-based, but very different.....both have at least 256 MB of GDDR3, hard drive, support same game engines, USB 2.0, cheap fans, IBM's 0.13 micron CPU process, and run DVDs for their games. (PS3 DVD9 games are possible). The new Xenons in 360 will have a 0.11 micron process (state-of-the-art process).

If you're gonna to make a next gen, then go all the way.

What's Xbox 2.0 then? A DirectX 10 Xbox with 1024 MB GDDR3 ATI Firecross GPU? Damn silly if that was Xbox 2.0. I wish I had a Firecross inside my PC, but it's over $500. If it was in my PC I'd have PS3 1080p graphics.

It is true that no games use the full power of consoles (in terms of all of those technical hardware specs), but the ones that come significantly closer to the rest are approaching a higher number of those limits - considerably higher than a cross platform title would likely be doing. I'll explain how I think (I don't know for sure) how ports are done.

Shortly after the concept of a game occurs, a target platform is also derived. It is usually a single platform in mind, with other consoles considered for porting. The Single platform picked will be the baseline machine the game will run on, and the engine will be designed to work fully to the game's prospective result. If the target is slated for multiplatform release, it is likely the developers might see that another platform is not able to perform well enough to handle something they are currently doing. When that happens they can take one of two approaches - lower the requirements of the feature allowing all platforms to support it, or keep it and struggle to find a way to make it work on other consoles with the possibility that it may not work at all for other consoles. When it comes time to write(port) for the other platforms, everything should go as smoothly as development for the baseline platform except those features which were either known to possibly not work on another platforms. There is also the possibility that something unforeseen performs better or worse than the baseline console. Assuming the ported platform is performing worse, then more money has to be put into the port to find a solution which could allow it to work. Even when the solution is found, it's likely that because the hardware doesn't naturally excel at the original task, it won't be fully utilized doing a task it wasn't designed to do.

On a technical level, the differences I'm talking about are things like integer vs floating point speed; general purpose vs streaming processing power; single threaded vs multi-threaded power. Things like memory size and general speed are usually not going to be an issue which a port couldn't handle. The polygon count on models could easily be increased or decreased to accommodate for a general speed difference. Different quality/sized textures can be used to accommodate for memory restrictions of another console. But if the game is pushing the floating point power of the baseline console, if a ported platform can't process floating point numbers as quickly, then the solution becomes much harder.

But Resident Evil 4 used full unization of the gc and ps2 hardware. It's the best looking game for cube, and one of the best looking games for PS2. Madden and NCAA Football always uses above average textures from all three consoles....NBA Live and FIFA I don't know. ESPN Football 2k5 got 9.0 scores on both Xbox and PS2 because it's the best looking football game on both platforms. Winning eleven 8 International got a 9.0 in graphics on both Xbox and PS2 because it was the best looking soccer game on PS2 with all the small touches EA Canada is too lazy to do with FIFA or they're limited with money spent. There is always an exception for EA Sports because they are the largest publisher.

Sony doesn't need to pay as many developers as much money to develop exclusively because a large enough number (mostly Japanese) believe that Sony will place more of its units in households than any other console by a large enough margin. And by focusing on one, they can focus on making the game look the best for whatever it is being developed for, ignore the issue of having portable code, and develop a better game.

I don't know. PS3 games are generally more costly than 360 games because the Cell Broadband Engine is more complex than Xenon with its 7 SPEs and a PPE at 3.2 GHz. Developers manage to know the hardware, but that takes time and money just like PS2. Final Fantasy 12 looks a lot better than say Ridge Racer 5 because a.) the textures are better b.) developers are finding more efficient game engines c.) video compression is better since 2000 (such as H264/X264).

I do believe that games most games won't exceed 9GB of data with the exception of RPGs

Indeed.

They generally look much better than the real time engines games of this generation have to offer and you get to sit back and actually appreciate the graphical detail since you're not fully engaged.

Looking at the Final Fantasy 13 gameplay screens, you don't really need any FMV at all. The GFX are on par with Final Fantasy X FMV. I know FF13 will do both game engine rendered and FMV, and it'll be on BD, but in Xbox 360's case, all the cutscenes can be rendered w/o FMV due to the DVD9.

And off of the low rate incoming like allowance or more commonly held jobs, a person under the age of 15 is probably not going to be able to save up to $600 - $700 (

When I was 15, Dreamcast was the best looking console out and it launched for $200. I bought it the first week with Sonic Adventure as my first game.

PS2 emulation for PC is still utterly slow even though the PS2 hardware is around 6 years old now PCSX2 0.9.1 gets around 15 fps in game now, in 0.9.0 it was 4 fps. I didn't get it to work with the 0.8.0 build.

when asked if ps3 is more powerful than xbox360. i dont expect multiplatform game developers to give us the truth

Well, I looked at the bandwidth of the memory for both Xbox 360 and PS3. I found out something interesting.

Xbox 360 Specs

256 GB/s eDRAM internal logic to eDRAM internal memory bandwidth

32 GB/s GPU to eDRAM bandwidth (2 GHz × 2 accesses per clock cycle on a 64 bit DDR bus)

22.4 GB/s memory interface bus bandwidth (700 MHz × 2 accesses per clock cycle (one per edge) on a 128 bit bus)

21.6 GB/s front side bus (aggregated 10.8 GB/s upstream and downstream)

1 GB/s southbridge bandwidth (aggregated 500 MB/s upstream and downstream)

PS3 SPEC

204.8 GB/s Cell Element Interconnect Bus (Theoretical peak performance)

Cell FlexIO Bus: 35 GB/s outbound, 25 GB/s inbound (7 outbound and 5 inbound 1Byte wide channels operating at 5 GHz) (effective bandwidth typically 50-80 % of total)[39]

51.2 GB/s SPE to local store

Experimental Sustained bandwidth for some SPE-to-SPE DMA transfers - 78 to 197 GB/s.[3

25.6 GB/s to Main Ram XDR DRAM: 64 bits × 3.2 GHz / 8 bits to a byte

22.4 GB/s to GDDR3 VRAM: 128 bits × 700 MHz × 2 accesses per clock cycle (one per edge) / 8 bits to a byte

RSX 20 GB/s (write), 15 GB/s (read)

System Bus (separate from XIO controller) 2.5 GB/s write and 2.5 GB/s read

PS3 does 48 GB/s RAM bandwidth vs. Xbox 360's 54.4 Gb/s RAM Bandwidth. Xbox 360 has 240 GFLOPS programmable and PS3 only has 211.2 GFLOPS programmable (source: Wikipedia) PS3 makes up the less bandwidth with a BD which can stream in uncompressed data so the Cell doesn't have to decompress data as much as Xbox 360 would to ballance the situation.

What you are paying for is the hardware that allows the PS3 to read Blue-Ray discs - which is the cost of the console.

The Blu-ray is the 2nd most costly componant in PS3 after Cell Broadband Engine (which must be most costly due to it being used in medical equipment by Mercury Systems.)

Counter-Strike and Fable are literally are PC games ported to the Xbox

Fable was released on PC after Xbox. It was actually Fable The Lost Chapters (the director's cut of Fable).

Also consider that the Cell is not yet a well known processor

Mercury Systems is advertising the hell out of it for medical equipment. Hospitals will be buying in bulk if they realize all the money they save with this state-of-the-art chip. STI announced a dual core Cell Broadband Engine in the making with 16 SPEs and 2 PPEs at 3.2 GHz. May be a possible PS4 CPU.

2. "Xbox 360 has more than 3x the general purpose power of the PS3?" "Cell processor has no branch prediction?" "Xbox360 has more memory system bandwidth?" If you have read something suggesting either of the above, it's probably from [url]<http://xbox360.ign.com/articles/617/617951p1.html>[/url] that horrible article IGN posted like Sony is definitely trying to add something to their controller though because it would be a bit disappointing of the controller returned to nothing more than buttons and the two sticks.

Yeah it's true. Wikipedia shows it on their webpage /w reliable resource. Wikipedia makes sure that the article is 100 % true!

Wiimote only has 1 "A" button excluding 1 select, 1 start PS3 controller has X, Square, Triangle, and circle with more triggers. Nintendo thinks it gains in movement what it loses in buttons. I really don't know if it'll work or not because neither console is out and gamers haven't complained, spread rumors, buzzwords, etc.

Xbox360 drive is faster by a significant margin over the PS3's Blue-Ray drive

I believe it. BD is 50 GB vs. DVD's 8.5 GB. You need all that space for HD FMV, uncompressed PCM sound, and the uncompressed game code preventing the Cell from decompressing compressed textures and game engine code like the Xenon has to do with the extra bandwidth. Does it take longer to play a ROM without a ZIP File or in a ZIP file? It has to first decompress the ZIP file and then load the rom.

Current X360 are not even near the full DVD9 capacity

I don't know. I heard Bizzare Creations complaining that they had to compress the contents to fit DVD9.

In ten years I'll probably looking into 100-130" ultra flat TV with at least twice the 1080p resolution.

You won't need it until all the satellite channels broadcast in "2160p". I doubt all of them will broadcast in 1080p because H264 encoding hardware is expensive for broadcasters meaning 1080p would have to be as more popular as LCD TVs now. Now'll most of them are broadcasting to look good on any CRT standard-definition TV made in the late 1990s.

Game size is getting bigger slowly, but I believe it is being capped on the PC side by most developers not expecting DVD drives to be standard and coming out with multi-CD releases.

PC developers are getting large discounts on CD media in bulk because it's obsolete and Installshield uses CAB, BZIP2 (open source zip), or lossy audio compression like Vorbis. Everybody can make CDs nowadays and PC publishers can bid on the lowest price. Factory-made CDs last longer than DVDs because it has a lot less pits and scratches almost never do damage to the data layer. PC publishers want the media to last a long time.

PC games are lazily programmed for. When games are in development targeting the PC, they also target hardware specs near or at the top of the line for the future. They look great because the hardware they are on is more advanced, but the problem is that the features they are using require top of the line cards to even run decently (holding 30FPS). Most of them fall below that mark unless you're looking at a wall and not much else if you're running an "above average" card or anything less than. Whether or not they look better is kind of subjective as the overall look and feel of console graphics always seem different than that of a PC to me.

Yeah, I knew that. I can't wait for AMD to release a quad-core Athlon 64. If it get enough money, I could afford one. This and WinVista with multi-thread support will be the cat's meow. Right now I can not afford such CPU or even a dual socket motherboard for Athlon 64 X2 4800s. WinXP only uses 1 core which sucks.

The best thing about pricing is the way stuff ends up in England

U.S Ps3 = $599 and i think 1 $ worth about 54p, so ps3 should be about £324.

but for some reason, U.K Ps3 = £425, GRRRRR

No, it's Sony Computer Entertainment of Europe wanting to rip off all Europeans with console prices and game prices because Sony knows Europeans will cash in that high and Americans won't (forcing the price down) The market shows that Europeans were more into the Commodore 64 (best selling computer of all time), ZX Sinclair Spectrum, Amiga whereas Americans were into NES, SNES, Genesis, Neo Geo games which cost a lot less and could be bought anywhere then the desktops listed above making the American gaming industry more profitable driving the price down anyways. When it was just hobby in Europe to collect computers, America already was big on hardcore Atari, Nintendo and Sega fans or something.

Unless you're trying to say that an old design like the RSX is somehow the same as a NEW GPU design; which wouldn't make any sense either since it would have as much chance of being a 7900 series card as a 7600 series

I wholeheartedly agree. It better be a Geforce 7900 before people start bitching it was a Geforce 7600. Knowing I'll have another game machine with lots of titles for it is better than a graphically superior PC any day. I mean I bought my last PS2 game 20 days ago, and my last Xbox game 10 days ago.

PC gamers have too much money to spend on hardware and for what? The hardcore ones will update the GPU 4 times in PS3's life time and a 19" monitor isn't a 25" LCD TV! That's true.

Its possible to put a DUAL Cell processor

A dual-core Cell with 16 SPEs really would be something in 2011. We know 3.2 GHz is the boundry due to heat issues. Yea, the PS4 will at least have 16 SPEs.

Hmm i would probably agree with that. But my point was not that ps3 will be bad at running linux, just that the 8 times more powerful comment is slightly misleading, as it makes it seem like ps3 is like the most powerful computer around, when in reality you shouldn't compare it to other computers really, as the ps3 is first and foremost a games console, so while you can expect it to be top of the range at running games, you shouldn't expect it to be one of the best computers on the market.

Well the best supercomputer money can buy is the IBM BlueGene which is actually 6 Bluegenes which is what people tend to do. Obviously because 1 Blue Gene does 36.01 Teraflops while PS3 does 1.8 Teraflops. National Nuclear Security Administration got their BlueGene supercomputer (you say as singular when talking about the whole thing) doing 207.3 TFLOPS

[url]http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Blue_Gene[/url]

Then PS3 has programmable GigaFlops and the amount is a lot less.

GoW pushes 360 to the limits a year after the 360 release.

GoW and Halo 3 both use the Unreal Engine 3.0 (says Microsoft Game Studios who bought a license) and it's the best looking 360 games to date. I am sure that the 360 hardware can manage better graphics engines like Unreal Engine 4 and Cytech 2 engine (using Direct X 10 and shader model 4.0)

What if Killzone has the graphics that Gears of War has?

Unreal Engine 3.0 is a DirectX 9.0 engine. We'll see superior graphics of both platforms once the graphic engines developed to use Direct X 10 are ported to consoles. We already know the X360 doesn't take advantage of all Direct X 10 features such as Shader model 4.0. PS3 uses OpenGL coz DirectX is exclusive to Microsoft and Dreamcast platforms.

The PS3's OS actually uses an entire SPE

I read that is the 8th SPE which isn't programmable for [i]game development[/i].

Actually, I think that VC-1 provides better PQ than H.264 at their respective max quality bit rates. More of the original content is lost with use of H.264. The benefit, of course, is more compression. It's a trade-off. If you have the storage capacity and the bandwidth, use MPEG2 – it provides superior PQ and it's cheaper. If you are more limited in storage space and/or bandwidth, use VC-1 – it's next in PQ and has a higher compression ratio than MPEG2. If you're even more limited in storage space and/or bandwidth, use H.264 – superior compression ratio but third in terms of PQ.

However, from what I understand, all three codecs look great at their respective max quality bit rates. I doubt that the average viewer would/could tell the difference between them. Most people don't watch a movie with the intent to evaluate its PQ, let alone to do side-by-side comparisons of the same content encoded with different codecs. If MPEG2 is used at its max quality bit rate on BD50, it can provide better PQ than VC-1 and H.264, but I doubt that anyone but videophiles, media, and fanboy would care. That's one of the least of BD's benefits.

The PS3 comes with Bluray having 2 hrs on SL-BD or 4 hrs on DL-BD in MPEG2. HD-DVD has 100 % MS VC1 films and 80 % of good films are released under HD-DVD. You can not tell the difference between 1080p and 1080i picture wise on a 720p HDTV.

So even though HD-DVD is the clear winner in the immediate future, I am buying both players. The end. It's how I eventually solve my consoles wars problems.

I read how gamers want hollywood to use VC1 on Blu-ray, but hollywood will not listen to PS3forums. What's cheaper? MPEG2 on DL-BD or VC1 on SL-BD? If it's a draw money wise...I'd be laughing so hard!

You forgot the 3GB video of the CEO of Square swimming in a pool of money. That would make 25GB easy

That doesn't exist from my knowledge. He isn't billionaire Scrooge McDuck off Ducktales. Ducktales is like you know for 8 yr olds. Well, at least i saw it at 8 yrs old.

That costs very little man hours to make the quality much better if they were to aim for a remake/compile.

You know if they stuck with MPEG and MPEG2 for each game, the programmer wouldn't have to mess with the game source code as much. If FFX13 is 15 GB then include it on DL-BD with the anthology.

You are also forgetting that the PS2 had a max of 480p output which was the best resolution for outputting the CG movies from Square-Enix games

If all these games were in an anthology....why would Squaresoft make 1920x1080 video if the PS2 FMV would be 720x480 anyways? I doubt Squaresoft has HD versions of the FFX/FFX2/FFXII video. :D It wouldn't make sense to me. Just like they didn't have HD video of any PS1 FMV they've created. Is it just me that believes that they never made HD video for those games?

you do know that SE would make WAY more profit if they distribute them through an online service.

I heard all about Sony's online service that allows you to purchase PS2 or PS1 games.

Problem is I have 512 Kbit broadband at home. In the future I'll have 3 Mbit. ISPs in the states just overcharge Wisconsinites on very little bandwidth. It's their damn fault! Not mine.

(don't know)

Its simple.

1/2 XDR 3.2 GHz

1/2 GDDR3 700 MHz

512 split isn't anything to complain about.

I have 3072 MB at 466 MHz which is fast dual channel memory, but not efficient. WinXP only uses 512 MB for itself leaving the rest wasted unless used for PC games which probably use 2 GB of the 3 GB available. To sum this up my memory timings really suck compared to the XDR and I know it.

People keep saying games would work faster and smoother in an uncompressed nature. I'm a video editor, I'm not entirely sure if it works the same for games, but, go get a program called Virtual Dub. Open a video file in it, and completely uncompress it. A simple half hour tv show will now be about 30GB. Now run it, unless you have a VERY good machine, the video will not play smoothly. In video's anyway, compression is more than just a way to save space.

Trilogies?

PS2 games take up 4.4 GB (says 4.7, but partitioned less) ? That's 5 PS2 games on a single layer BD! 10 PS2 games on DL-BD and 20 PS2 games on QL-BD.

You know no publisher will have 10 PS2 games on one bd in the first 4 years. It's not going to like Mega Man X collection or Mega Man Anniversary Collection. Trilogies are honest worth.

Square-Enix would technically be able to fit all the Final Fantasy on SL-BD with room left over for Chrono Trigger and Chrono Cross.

FF1. 256k

FF2 256k

FF3 3 MB (FFVI Japan only)

FF4 (Final Fantasy 2 for SNES) 1 MB

FFV 2.5 MB

FF Tactics 500 MB

FFVII 1.775 GB

FFVIII 2.354 GB

FFIX 2.364 GB

FFX - 4.1 GB

FFX2 - 3.73 GB

FFXII - 4.4 GB

[b]SUBTOTAL[/b] 19.230 GB

Chrono Cross. 1.22 GB

Chrono Trigger 500 MB (PSX version)

Final Fantasy Origins 488 MB

[b]Total[/b] 21.438 GB

Alberta doesn't have PST, only GST, which is now down to 6 % and will be 5 % sometime later on. Maybe I should go on a road trip to Alberta just to buy a PS3...

I was kinda surprised how less the launch price increased from PS2 -> PS3 in Canada. PS2 was $500, PS3 (20gb) is only $550, and the 60gb one being 650. Pretty damn good deal (until you see the price after tax... shudders).

Considering most (85 %) Blu-ray players are $1000....PS3 is pretty inexpensive!

BD video player + 1080p videogame for less.

Why is it so inexpensive you ask?

A.) The BD drive is made by Sony.

B.) the PS3 actually costs $900 to manufacture

- C.) Sony is using the PS3 to get Blu-ray to take off on the ground running.
- D.) The BD drive will break after 18 months forcing you to get another PS3.

If PS4 is only Cell with 16SPEs the debate would be the same as with nintendo Wii now. "Why release marginally faster console than previous console Wait, Cell is a "super computer on a chip" (quote from Mercury Systems) so two cell broadband engines are almost twice as fast. If PS4 had 1024 MB GDDR4 and 1024 MB XDR at 3.2 GHz than you might have 7.2 Teraflops performance. $[1.8 \times 4 = 7.2 \text{ TF}]$ By 2011, this kind of hardware would cost you at least \$500. I am just staying in realms of reality because I know dual core cell was announced by STI, and teh ATI Crossfire 1 GB GDDR3 GPU is out. I refuse to get bizzare with tech specs of the PS4 based on it having 7.2 TF performance.

Has it ever crossed your mind Sony hasn't talked big on RSX because there maybe isn't anything to talk big about.

I hope it's based on Geforce 7900, but I'll live with teh current Geforce 7800 spec because that's still awefully good. Better then Xbox 360 and developers have yet to meet Xbox 360's hardware limits such as running Unreal Engine 3.5 on it. It'll be like the difference between Unreal Championship and Unreal Championship 2 on Xbox.

"to finish a game done is hard enough under the best circumstances, and to finish a game on hardware that's evolving is even worse"

I had no idea that they lowered the clock speed to be able to complete games. I found out that Suse Linux 10 lowers clock speed to 1 GHz on Athlon 64s because the other 1.6 GHz would be totally wasted.

I still think that there is some intellectual property protection going on with Nvidia regarding the RSX. Both Sony and Nvidia may have a dual binding agreement not to release anything on this GPU until a certain time.

I read somewhere that the Geforce 7900 is cheaper to manufacture then the Geforce 7800 because the G80 core is using 0.11 micron process instead of 0.13 micron process and that reduces heat issues. The fansink is the same size on the PCI-e version.

Plus it's using 230 million transistors instead of 270 million transistors that supress the GB/s on the Geforce 7800.

direct competitors the Radeon 9500-9800 series and nVidia had to resort to doing Half precision (16bit FP)

I have a Radeon 9800 XT and it plays 90 % of my PC titles fine at 1280x1024 which is good on a 17" CRT monitor.

Nvidia's last console GPU was NV2A for the XBOX. It was derived from the PC GPU NV20 through customisation that gave it the edge. It had 2 vertex shaders and 2 ALUS per shader pipe - features only found in next generataion NVIDIA NV30 GPU that was still to come. The NV20 of the time had only 1 vertex shader pipe

I know it runs games at 800x600. Please don't say it's really, really obsolete. It's not even old school yet like 16-bit consoles. Forza Motorsport and Far Cry Instincts came out only last year and i thought it was decent looking on my TV. Not to mention devaluing my 66 Xbox game collection.

Suppose you could play Gran Turismo 5 with selectable Japanese content, like soundtracks, or even voice prompts in Japanese with subtitles. Suppose you could mix and match almost everything. Sonic Adventure for the Dreamcast was available in this form, and it was much cooler to play with the Japanese voiceovers. I'm hoping that this is one way that developers take advantage of the Blu-ray's capacity. I would think that it would ease production costs too, since you'd only be producing one product.

Say developers didn't encode voice overs in AD-PCM (which is what it is normally) and instead use something better like aoTuV Vorbis at 128 kbps. You can fit 1.5 hrs of voice under 100 MB. If other platforms used a highly lossy format like aoTuV vorbis...you could achieve this on a DVD9. I heard voice files on Xbox 360 and a 128 kbps mp3 sounds good enough for listening thru two stereo speakers. A aoTuV Vorbis 1.1.2 at 64 kbps (q-9) sounds clean so developers could fit 2 hrs of voice in 100 MB space. I have a aoTuV vorbis music collection so i know a little what i am talking about.

Whatever you heard is incorrect. NURBs are hard to animate, and Sub-D (sub-division surfaces) are the way to go . Not to mention, "polygons" don't really exist, what you are talking about are vertex, which are what "poly"-gons are comprised of. Basically, a N-gon. N being however many vertex there are connected together.

PSP natively supports Nonuniform rational B-splines so PS3 must support it. I know both platforms share the PSP GUI.

NURBs take up less hardware spec to do the same amount of graphics as polygons because they're "lighter" ut most definitely not the BEST football game out there

What is? ESPN Football 2k5? because you're a Sega fan or something? ESPN Football 2k5 had very good graphics for Xbox, but you got to listen to John Madden talk and he is the most popular football announcer now otherwise he wouldn't be commentary for the Super Bowl or Monday Night Football.

It wasn't really multi-platform, there were two different teams that did each different version, exclusively for each console, utilizing its strengths and minimizing its weaknesses.

Both games were from Capcom Development Studio 4 (who did RE0, RE, RE2, RE3, Code Veronica too).

Nope, the Blu-Ray drive is the most expensive

Taking Nintendo's ideology (the absolutely right one) that game code doesn't take up much space (as in don't need Blu-ray/HD-DVD) would shave $100 off the PS3 price. Then have nexpak DVD cases for PS3 games because PS3 games will be on DVD too. PS3 could still have H264 encoded HD FMV on the DVD9. Announce an external Blu-ray-ROM like Microsoft's external HD-DVD-ROM.

Now we know Sony isn't smart enough to do external Bluray rom have have a internal one for everyone.....developers should fill it on with "How they made the game" movies and unlockable emulated games which could give competition indirectly against Wii's Virtual Console.

Examples

Ninja Gaiden Black has Ninja Gaiden (NES)

Metroid Prime has Metroid (NES)

Sonic Mega Collection has Ristar, Comix Zone

Prey has Black Jack, 7 Stud Poker, Space Invaders and Pacman clones at the bar.

Tekken 5 had a old school shoot 'em up game

Ridge Racer for PSP had a old school car maze game

Moto GP 2006 has Pong, and others.

No commercial OS (wait, lets also include free ones like Linux) is currently built to take advantage of multi-core CPU's because when they were made, none were in the market (Remember, XP is from 2001).

You should know because PS3 is going to have one of the latest versions of K Desktop Environment on it. There is also the half-open source Solaris Unix supporting dual core Athlon 64 or Core 2 or dual core Cell (in the future).

Commerical Linux servers like Redhat Enterprise Linux 4 support duo-core or two duo core CPUs. In my opinion, Fedora Project 4 is just a puppet distrubution for Redhat to get their meaty hands on it and charge people for a liscense /w tech support.

Yeah, he is sort of lovable, and he is in the pro football hall of fame.

First of NURBs are a HUGE pain tot work with

I never heard that it was a pain to work with.

Pursuit force

Really? I never read that review for PSP. IGN gave it a 8.4 / 10. Seemed like a nice looking PSP title! I am trying to buy Diseaga and Xenosaga while keeping $400 in my account. It's pretty hard. I wanted to buy the whole .Hack series, but i forced myself not to spend uncontrollibly.

Also PSP GPU and RSX have no relation what so ever

Polygons have been used since Sega Saturn's Panzer Dragoon (1995) so NURBs are like polygons. It's like GIF and PNG. One is better then the other, but for some reason both are used today probably due to broadband sppeds.

That said they could maybe still use BR9 discs

Oh really? Thats sort of interesting. Does Sony want to save 10 cents on every disc, because they wouldn't be using less material to fabracate the BD9. I original thought a BD9 was a 3" mini-BD. Seeing a mini-BD would be cool.

rofl...yeah, that'll put PS3 on top for sure...LOL

PS3 is already on top. The Cell and RSX throws out 1.8 Teraflops and right now the first generation titles have 211 Gigaflops programmable which should increase because why would Sony put out 1.8 Teraflops in the specs for?

Also, I always think its interesting people worry so much about the $100- $200 price difference between the consoles

I don't have any problems spending money on games. If I didn't spend money on Diseaga 2 or Xenosaga Episode III...I would have $550! Diseaga 2 is going to be very rare, and it's the #1 PS2 game this year at gamerankings.com. IT BEAT FF12! There is still time.

Don't chance it. Heck save your PS2 and wear it out first. My PS3 is going to last me four years like my Gamecube and Sega Dreamcast have.

I realize that the Sony company has been awesome when it comes to video games

Awesome at JRPGs. My PS collection is full of greats like Lunar 1 & 2, Grandia, Legend of Dragoon, Final Fantasy Origins/Anthlogy/Chronicles/Tactics VII/VIII/IX. Xenogears, Vagrant Story, Star Ocean 2, Persona 2: Eternal Punishment, Chrono Cross, PS2 was the same way. Xenosaga Episode 1/2/3, Final Fantasy X & X2, Star Ocean 3, Alitar Iris 1 &2, Shin Mensei Tensei trilogy, Breath of Fire V, Dark Cloud 1 & 2, Grandia II, III, Xtreme, Diseaga 1 &2.

I don't know about the other genres well. IT's killer department was RPGs....nobody comes close in this genre. All the talent is on PS and PS2.

irst, $100-200 makes a huge difference. If sony hope to sell roughly 10 million units in the first 12 months that amounts to $1-2 Billion.

For most poeple. I find the PS3 better then a Geforce 7950 GX2 any day. The Geforce 7950 is superior and will one day fall below PS3 price point by a $100, but this alone won't change my opinion out the PS3. I don't know what will happen five years down the road.

I think sony did a fine job on the PsP ,and they will on the Ps3

What will tick me off is if teh PS3 had heatsink problems and OS glitches like the Xbox 360 had last year. Remember, the Xbox 360 would crash and give error messages.

I think the 360 GUI is just strange. I don't like it. I think it's very non-intuitive.

Well it doesn't bother me because I am never in it. Game booting on a cold boot is all i care about, friend and yes on occasion i played MP3s on the X360 on some of the racing games AND I STILL HAVEN'T BOUGHT A 2nd CONTROLLER SINCE JANUARY! Shame on me! Games expenses are more important then friends it seems. That's the disadvantage of being not so middle class. Tough to make these hard decisions, but i do manage and get some games i want.

Grand Theft Autos have never been "loyal" to anyone

Yeah, I got sick of running mafias two years ago. It only does so much. So it has pretty graphics, clever game play, and a bunch of licensed music. That won't stop people from playing. What i am saying is we need to say more Halo, Mario and Final Fantasy then "Grand THeft Auto".

So basically you're saying that quadrupling memory capacity quadruples performance

Hell no! The IBM Rochester (Blue Gene prototype) does 36.01 TFLOPS in Sept 29, 2004 and that was the fastest computer on Earth at that time so it can't be more then 7.2 Teraflops. I can say anything here I want I thought. Feel free to ignore me.

Wouldn't it be great if PS4 had 2 GB of futuristic RAM though....half XDR/half GDDR4

"Better" isn't always better. I'd prefer that if they have to use a lossy compression scheme, they use one which preserves the fidelity of the source material. I'd much rather they use lossless techniques, since I'm not sure how efficient it would be to use a number of compression types in the same sound engine for voices, sound effects and music. I want everything to sound crisp, spacious and hifi on my sound system to match the highly detailed graphics.

You don't need 16-bit voice-only audio in redbook standard. You got 128 Kbps Vorbis and at 80 kbps it sounds better the He-AAC according to Hydrogen Forums which is like 2 channel 16-bit audio.

[url]<http://www.hydrogenaudio.org/forums/index.php?showtopic=35438>[/url]

[url]<http://forum.hardware.fr/hardwarefr/VideoSon/MP3-WMA-AAC-OGG-qualite-kbps-evaluation-sujet-84950-1.htm>[/url]

As for Processing power, your iPod with a Zilog z80 CPU can decode Ogg Vorbis (but since it doesn't have vorbis, mp3) or what ever CPU is in your average mp3 player. But the obvious truth is have lossness codecs because space isn't an issue. (I'm justifying that Vorbis at 128kb in a RPG can fit all Japanese voiceovers on a NTSC DVD9 under 100 MB).

A 12x DVD drive only reads at 120.96Mbps at one point on the disc. It is slower at every other point on the disc

GAWD. 12x DVD-ROM came out in 2001 for PCs. BD-ROM came out in 2006 for PCs. And you're comparing 5 year old technology to future technology? What's wrong with you people! I might as well pwn all of you and say

Holographic Versatile Disc (3.9 terabytes) has better bandwidth and more space than BD. [b] BD's are obsolete and suck! [/b]

[img]http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/en/3/38/Hvd_disc.jpg[/img]

Pwns BD

A multicore Cell with larger LSRam dumps and a unified cache between PPE cores would murder just about anything I could even think of short of BioProcessing or electron deflection

IBM, could you please make a X86 compatible version?

Wow, alot of people have voted the "G80" selection in the poll now

It's wishful thinking. All those people want G80 equipped Ps3s for $500. I want it too, but it's up to Sony whether or not they can "afford it" A G80 core goes for a hefty price. Tigerdirect is selling the BFG Geforce 7900 GTX OC for $450 USD! Unless Nvidia can have less transistors on the RSX than Geforce 7900, it will be more expensive to make. It's possible because the Geforce 7950 has less transistors than Geforce 7800 while doing 76.8 GB/sec bandwidth.

Will they make something that looks remarkably like the Cell

Sony wouldn't put 150 million into creating STI if they couldn't get an evolution of Cell Broadband Engine v1.0 five years down the road. So a Cell Broadband Engine sequel would seem likely. (the latest version around launch of PS4)

The load time is steady on Blu-Ray

Yea, don't go with Xbox 360 because the loading times in PS3 are similar and games like God of War where PS2 loading times are speedy (proving inferior hardware to xbox could have as speedy times). It took you by surprise in 2006 when the first 18 months of PS2 launch was noticeably worse with the exception of Final Fantasy X because loading times were streamed instead of loaded at once. Unusual for PS2 games of 2001.

yes i agree but can u explain to me which is actually better in today's games (ps2 as well as ps3) loading at once or streaming?
thanx

If the XDR RAM is able to be processed by RSX wouldn't the total RSX bandwidth be 48 GB/sec.....only 28 GB/sec short of the Geforce 7950 GX2? Aside from frame rate...what will 28 GB/sec more bandwidth do RSX can't achieve?

25.6 GB/s to Main Ram XDR DRAM: 64 bits × 3.2 GHz / 8 bits to a byte

22.4 GB/s to GDDR3 VRAM: 128 bits × 700 MHz × 2 accesses per clock cycle (one per edge) / 8 bits to a byte

But I admit few of my privately owned PC games stash take advantage of the G70....

G70 examples

Elder scrolls iv

FEAR (had frame rate problems with the Radeon 9800 XT)

Doom 3

Black and White 2

Guild Wars Factions

G60/Radeon 9800 XT

everything else is quite playable

The PS3 DOES NOT support DX10. That is just the microsoft API.

Yeah

What the heck are you talking about Resistance is a piece of  man it can't even go toe to toe with Call of Duty 3 let alone Mass Effect

I've had heard rumors of Insomniac Games making Ratchet and Clank 5. You should go yay! Another Ratchet sequel to sink my teeth in 1080i Dolby DTS 5.1 Surround!

Gears of War running the same engine has much more graphical fidelity than UT2007

I Can't tell. I was playing UT2004 yesterday and both games look better. Maybe we don't need anything better than Unreal Engine 2.5 because the game I was playing had as good as it gets game play. Games can suffer because 66 % of the focus is on making pretty textures and lighting effects. Take Ninety-nine Nights for example. Great graphics, but horrible game play.

Also how about magnificent Lair

Dude, is that a Panzer Dragoon clone? I like Panzer Dragoon Orta for Xbox because Graphics are a 10! I also would pay $60 for Panzer Dragoon Saga at present, but i know the game would go for much more money.

. So It is the g80 totally I say

Probably. If Nvidia can achieve pulling out 78 GB/s with less transistors than Geforce 7950 GX2, and i think they can because the company has prototypes for three years in the future.

I expect it to be a pretty hefty cutting edge machine

I agree it's technology-advanced for $500 console in November. Not 2008, not 2010, but for 2006.BTW, Nintendo is interested in 1080i gaming in 5 years. It's gonna be a 3 core Broadway-compatible at 3.2 GHz

Well thanks guys, lol. And the thing about saying RSX could have 512mb

If you want your PS3 to be $600 with the 20 GB HDD go for it. Sony is losing $400 on each one already. The goal is to make PS3 cheaper to manufacture, not more expensive. If Sony added everything, Sony would be hurting financially worse than now. Their only good product is the Playstation. Few people are buying TVs, computers, dvd players, car cd players, mp3 players from Sony and their about to abandon the electronics industry if PS3 doesn't do well and rely on their hollywood and music industry. I doubt you realize how much financial stress the E3 spec is for Sony.

nd I'm pretty sure that PC graphics cards reach pretty close to 1920x1080@120fps now

Now, I want to ask for a Geforce 7950 GX2 for Christmas so my PC games can have that framerate. If I make that choice I won't be able to run Halo 2 or Crisis or Far Cry 2. And I don't exactly have anybody to show it off too. (except posting screenshots on imageshack.us.)

There will be no more XDR. Cell is designed from the ground up to run with 256MB

Exactly. The only specs changing in the PS2 was the CPU from 294 MHz to 299 MHz (PStwo) and the DVD-ROM from 4x to 6x (PStwo) The 5 MHz extra on the CPU was to reduce heat generated by early PS2s.

Some peoples expectations are beyond unrealistic

Yeah, PS3 isn't a bleeding edge videogame console. It's high end. I don't know how you can say it's 3 years ahead of it's time like Sega Dreamcast was. This had everything to do with the SuperH 4 at 200 MHz while PS3 was easily superior (1/3 more powerful) three years later. That was before i was into high-end PC graphics. I got hyped on a year old system in 1999 and bought 42 games to day for the platform.....

Sony is playing a different game here. Their E3 presentation had next to nothing to do with showing the gamers what they want and was more about showing investors what they want.

Sony isn't going to flinch or go into damage cotnrol mode just because they have an opponent who is flinging mud in every possible manner. They are the market leader. Sony is merely acting as anyone would when they are the leader in their market..

It pisses off a lot of people to no end, but the gamers voted with their dollars for the past two generations to put Sony on top by no small margin beyond their competitors. If they want to make a $500 and $600 console then so be it. The market will be there even if it isn't the same market that was there before. They've said it themselves "Our strength is in the higher end market".

That pisses even more people off. THEIR idea of gaming is the same status quo that has been fed to you for the past two decades. If you are a gamer then you are a fourteen year old kid who waits til Christmas to get anything you want. But the real story here is that the Playstation generation has grown up and they want their console to grow with it.

The ONLY way to make this happen is to have some high end hardware with robust functionality to appeal not only to the gamer base from ages before, but also people like me who happen to be a little older and out making the real money. Again, this pisses some people off. Sony wants to throw a party and asks you to dress formally. There will always be the jackasses who think that its wrong for anyone to throw a party anywhere that you can't wear a T-shirt and torn jeans to.

The PS3 is not built, designed, nor marketed to said people. THAT is why Sony has been acting "stuck up" lately. If you have an HDTV and a DOLby 5.1 or 7.1 Surround sound system, then you're NOT going to complain about an internet connected HD-movie/gaming machine with exclusive content and service, now are you?

Oh, and if Mr. T-shirt says "But not everyone has an HDTV" tries to say it's wrong for Sony to cut people off like that... Just tell that to Sony's Corporate Office that is seeing record breaking Bravia sales I'm sure you'll give them a change of heart. Go get a Wii and wait for the PS3s price to drop if it really hurts you so much, but don't fake it by saying a $400 console with expensive peripherals and a pay-to-play online service that acts as an extender to said companies Operating System monopoly is the "affordable" solution and purely a "gaming machine".

I agree with you on the players choice where money goes. My friends all have PS2s which certainly means something. This is where all the traditional gamers go....and they have no where else but PS2 or Xbox.

Sony has better racing, RPGs, and platform games then Xbox 360. box 360 has some fun first person shooters, but that's just my opinion. Prey, GRAW, Perfect Dark Zero and Call of Duty 2 rock!

Don't worry, I'm just playing Xbox 360 till PS3 comes out.

The whole deal with that was that Konami promised Microsoft an exclusive MGS game and when MGS2:S was announced,

I own MGS2 Substance for Xbox and I thought it came out before the same game for PS2. It was suppose to excite xbox fans because it was discussed so often during the 2001 release. It was suppose to help sell the xbox because PS2 had 80 % of the popular sequels coming out.

Anyway, Blu-ray is going to be quite a stumbling block for PS3s competitors as time goes on

Not if the Xbox 360 games fit on a single DVD9. Another point is a BD-25 looks no more cooler than a DVD9 by looking at it. You won't be able to put it into your computer unless you can afford a BD-ROM.

How the textures are uncompressed, how the game and audio content has run up the size of the entire game so far to 22GBs or more, and may end up being 35gigs (GAH!!)

There is a yield problem with DL-BD so DL-BD video will run $50. This means no PS3 games will be DL-BD at launch...get it outta your head. There probably is going to be a few PS3 games on DVD9 because in my opinion it was a Xbox 360 port and the compression didn't need to [i]unevolve[/i] such as sports games.

But the poor Wii will be left out in the cold.

I played Sonic Adventure for Dreamcast 1 hour ago and Wii pwns those graphics. I admit Sonic Adventure was colorful, high resolution, and sufficient for "fun". You can't go wrong with the best selling Dreamcast game! Not because I am in poverty, but because I felt like it.

It's looking like the Wii will take off like a rocket as people pounce on the more affordable system,

Oh. I am wealthy enough to own all three consoles + games (whenever I get my hands on PS3). Europeans can say that's because Americans afford the cool *. The Wii won't delude me from this year's goal...the PS3 and Geforce 7950 GX2.

Personally I think that the Wii is fairly expensive for what you are getting Because it's sold at a $30 loss. It's using the Apple G3's 750 CX CPU (cheap) and make the latest game tools compatible with a Gecko (hence the Gecko on steroids thing) with max resolution of 800x600 with 24-bit color. The same resolution I ran Unreal Tournament and in 1999 and Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction in 2001. You know how many Nintendo fans are on battlenet? Millions. You know how many gamers would buy Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction for Wii? Millions. It'll outsell Super Smash Bros. Brawl!

Second, online gameplay

Diablo 2 Lord of Destruction gets my vote! Port it to Xbox 360 too.

It instills trust in Microsoft, meaning the consumers will go back to them again and again

Windows users have no choice. Microsoft gives us gamers DirectX so I forgive them for their tyrant like monopoly.

There's nothing worse than seeing another company make something way better than something you brought in to the industry. and seen as though there has been a big silence on the subject for a while now

It was like that 15 years ago. Buying a NES in '88 because those things keep breaking (due to cheap components, and dust) and having Sega Genesis coming out in January '89 or September '89 with Phantasy Star II and Alter Beast. Some of the hype was that the Motorola 68000 was only found in the Commodore Amiga 500 (cost $1000 at in '89) with 1 MB of RAM! That was a lot back then....(like 1 GB of RAM now). Today, you can emulate Turrican 2 for free with WinUAE.

100 dollars more for Blu-ray..hmmmm sounds good

Put it in contexts. A BDRW costs $500 - $550!

Blu-Ray players are going to retail at around $800 to $1200 at launch

The problem here is to make people want BD video in the first place. Having a sticker on the retail box won't have a affect if poeple don't choose to ungrade. I want too.

at does what you say oblivion does for you.

I know elder scrolls iv oblivion has grass and lots of it. EA Sports was talking grass in PS3 version of Madden Football 2007 which lead people to believe that Xbox 360 couldn't do 3D polygon grass. There is Kameo and Oblivion having 3D grass. Xbox 360 version of Madden NFL 2007 looks entirely astroturf (concrete painted green) whereas PS3 has fieldterf (fake 3D grass). (Fieldterf doesn't die in 30 degree weather like Ford Field (Detroit, Michigan) (Rumor: CFL Players go to NFL games because NFL Teams play a lot better)

Tell me, who is the next president of America?

Arnold Schwarzenegger and John McCain as Vice President.

This would leave around 7BG for game data, but for games relying on pre-rendered scenes to tell and develop the story, multiple DVDs may be requir

Easiest solution: encode all the 720 video in H264/VC-1

Normal solution: encode all the FMV in Bink Video at 1000x660 at 900 kbps which is higher then NTSC, but lower resolution the 720p.

Hard Solution: Crop video so you can fit as much 720p video on 1 DVD9 as possible.

Insomniac cannot use space on a disk well, and have a massively bloated game.

Insomniac is using LPCM for all the audio. All the movies are Bink Video in HD (1280x720's look awesome at 900 kps on PS3, Xbox, Xbox 360) and last is the texture data has a 2:1 compression ratio. I was just thinking of some sloppy obsolete codecs and lossness compression they would use.

Any logical person would of pick the second option for the simplest fact of suprising and wowing everyone

Anything running at 720p is good enough for me. I think 1080p as a free bonus because I don't own a 1080p TV.

I'm not buying a single HD-DVD or Blu-Ray movie till there is a winner in the format war.

Aint it true. See, Womble I can write a lot!
Heres some more

I'm not buying a single HD-DVD or Blu-Ray movie till there is a winner in the format war.

The loosing format is not going to disappear Betamax. These are cheap formats that have various usages for storing data. There will be blank discs of both formats regardless of popularity. Nero 7 has Bluray and HDDVD supported and functional VC-1 encoder is out at doom9.org. If you're wonderign why it's free it's because it's beta, but functional. In binary forum too /w installer even! Not command prompt encoder like OpenAVS.

trust me, microsofts launch is all about them getting to the 10 million in console sales than the competition

Microsoft is rich enough to launch 1080p hardware with 5.1 surround sound onto the streets only $50 more dollars than Wii on November 19th. Halo 3 comes out November 17th! Though I will be at Wal-mart at midnight this doesn't guarantee me a PS3.

But the whole point is that Blu-ray is being used for Games, Movies and Consumer Archival use Exactly, but but the logical way is to buy PS3 now, use 3 DVD9s (less expensive than 1 Samsung SH-B022 + SL-BDR) on your current DVD burner. You can exactly share your BD media with friends because BD-ROMs aren't common place in PCs. Wait until it is common place.

Microsoft were a bit too early to market

And PC graphics were 3 years ahead of their time! I was running games like Dungeon Siege and Neverwinter Nights and Elder Scrolls III Morrowind at 720p long time ago. I was running Half-life 2 at 720p when it came out on November 2004. No games had the PS3 level of detail because none of the current game engine technology existed in 2002.

you need an X360 to even use it, that's past the £425,

Exactly. PS3 and Blu-ray is one. And non-gamer HD-DVD enthusiasts aren't buying a Xbox 360 for the HD-DVD attachment. Though this was true for PS2 in 2000, it's got a little funny in 2000 because PS2 literally converted the whole country of Japan to DVD video. Before PS2, their DVD video market was niche!

Microsoft's position doesn't look very good if you ask me

What are you talking about! Their business department dealing with everything Windows is making 4 billion annually in stock value. That's why whenever I say I hate Microsoft in Public I always get noticed. Without Windows, Corporate America would fall a part!

I'm not saying those things make the Xbox360

Yeah, Xbox 360 graphics didn't exist on the streets three years ago so it can't be horrible! You have to wait another 2 years before you can start saying Xbox 360 graphics look ugly because by then we'll have PC GPUs with 2 Gigabytes of GDDR4 RAM with DirectX 10 acceleration with games that fully support that kind of texture bandwidth. I'm thinking Unreal Tournament 2010 (unreal engine 4) or amongst those lines.

I still don't think 512MB is future proof

No *! I got 3072 MB DDR2 plus the 256 MB GDDR3 in my PC and PS3 isn't out yet.

Yeah but THATS A PC WITH A  ARCHITECTURE!

CONSOLES have dedicated UNIQUE, MADE FOR THE JOB ARCHITECTURE!

It doesn't matter about the RSX and its ram compared to how it connect to the rest of the system.

It's AMD64/X86-64 dual core ARCHITECTURE! It was a Xmas gift so i'm happy and it's not Core 2 Duo because it predates it.

Not outside the PowerPC in the cell.

The Cell is a supercomputer capable of 2.18 Teraflop, but with a Geforce 7900 GTX 512 MB videocard addition....my PC can run any PC game released this year or next year at 1920x1024 with 4x anti-aliasing. And if you've got the cash on hand....you have a brilliant "PC3" already

And * I can emulate any console PS2 or before. I can't run DC because I have dump games thru FTP via Phantasy Star Online (but I got Chankast 0.25 to work)

Heh, which bit are you talking about? Its got a PowerPC core, but the architecture is nothing to do with PCs.

[i]You said before

Yeah but THATS A PC WITH A * ARCHITECTURE!

CONSOLES have dedicated UNIQUE, MADE FOR THE JOB ARCHITECTURE!

It doesn't matter about the RSX and its ram compared to how it connects to the rest of the system.[/i]

And the bit you've missed out is the architecture. How are you connecting your gfx card? PCI-e?

Not too many Socket 940 motherboards are AGP.

I strongly suggest you understand that you're not talking to an idiot

I read your post of the year. I admire your work. Wasn't a programmer, but I like most of us just play the end result (and read the official tech specs). I don't see bugs unless it slows down or the player moves the camera into the wall evident in many n64 games, Super Mario Sunshine, and Star Fox Adventures.

Microsoft position is looking very bright

They control Direct X and therefore are in some minimal control of what goes on PC game developer. How do you make a stable game on sometimes stable or unstable operating system depending on how long it's been since your last format actually. They're the ones that have to make the game run when programs are starting to crash due to trojan horses or spyware. Okay, point is they're popular with PC game developers.

Xbox 360 is selling well because it's the only 8th generation console on the market. In many ways Microsoft is competing against itself in two areas. The hardcore/traditional console market and the hardcore PC market (untouched by Mac/Linux if you ignore console market). Microsoft needs another first person shooter besides Halo like Perfect Dark Zero, but a PC version of Perfect Dark Zero. FPS has got to be #1 genre.

Xbox original does not have superior technology to the PS2

Doesn't have superior game engine technology. The MHz in the RAM/GPU/CPU are a bit higher than PS2 meaning maybe there is a visible improvement in graphics. I think Xbox as a Gamecube with a Geforce 3.

people do not mention the difference between the PS2 and Xbox

How could you not mention it? I hear this difference often offline. Remember when people wanted the Xbox version of GTA Double Pack because it has a graphics/frame rate improvement. That sent ripples across the community that Xbox was cooler to own than PS2 was. Same thing happens Madden Football 2k7 and Winning Eleven Soccer 8 International where people bought the Xbox version for the increase in frame rate and anti-aliasing. However Madden wins PS2 hottest game in America.

There's more to it than that, but I'll spare you the gory details what of went on in that machine

I already know it. Got the game collection to prove it.

I think it would definately be prettier but I don't know if they would do anything too different.

Raise the clock speeds of everything. If it came out this November, it may of been 1.5 Teraflops instead of only 1 teraflop.

because the ps3 will be capable of doing much more

If developers start making excellent sequels to launch titles then I'll keep supporting it. If not I'll support it minimally and suppport the console with good games or i'll collect really old games by going to the game store and paying too much (less then a PS3 game, but more then what a SNES/Genesis title is worth. I want a Neo Geo, but don't have the money. Forced to play Blazing Star / Pulstar on Neo Rage X emu. Fun games, just GFX outdated, and the cart versions are $200 or more to own.

The PS3's controller is old technology

Certainly it looks like a Dual Shock from the PS1 era. Don't mind it, they know it's the best selling controller ever...MS is teasing Sony for having a popular product so their own fans don't leave due to cowardly acts.

Why are people largely ignoring the Xbox 360?

I dunno. It's still popular in St. Croix County, Western Wisconsin because it's a Xbox and there is a Winner (Xbox 360) and Loser, Gamecube. Same thing with handhelds. There is a Winner, NDS, and a loser, Playstation Portable. Though it is much harder to draw a fine line between PSP and NDS. Neither side wants to admit they're the losing format so I got this information via Target and Wal-mart sales.

Why is the PS2 and Xbox selling better than the 360

Because PS2 is the best selling console of all time says Guinness World of Records. Xbox is the primary competitor to the best selling console of all time.

No, it is selling better than the original Xbox at the same time in it's life cycle.

Oh really? I don't sound excited beacuse i got one already.

Wi-fi is not good for gaming due to lag/latency, or whatever you want to call it

Then explain to me why can you go online with just 1 MBit and have a decent connection with first person shooters (UT2004, Counter Strike source, FEAR, Doom 3) or RPGs (Guild Wars, Diablo 2, Neverwinter Nights, World of Warcraft, Everquest) and then 10 Mbit connection with 5 other people still is solid as long as everyone is patched with the same patch.

Hahaha fits your statement perfectly

Yeah it does destroy Xbox 360, but games for 360 are running at 720p and so are the ones on PS3. I think they're thinking like Nintendo which is about about low-end 480p graphics starting at $249.99. The point is majority of gamers have 720p TVs, why even make 1080p support in games? At least for the remainder of 2006. So PS3 can not destroy Xbox 360 at 720p resolution, neither console breaks a sweat there.

The Cell isn't going to run Windows XP for the mass market

lol. GNU software.....

My 3 year old athlonXP 2200+ rips MP3 from CD in 10secs

My PC can rip MP3 at q=5 in 4 seconds. It's on a fresh (3 days old) installation....

I know there is nothing that supports Vorbis except PC/PPC, but it's a nice encoder. Does PSP v2.5 have vorbis supported?

P.S. I have having hard time deciding whether or not I like AuToV Vorbis or he-AAC better.

"Cell kicks the crap out of Intel/AMD

With the exception of Intel/AMD running a Geforce 7950 GX2 or G80 GPU (Geforce 8800 GTX). Something that costs a "PS3" as of now.

[img]http://images.tomshardware.com/2006/06/05/geforce_7950_gx2/7950gx2front.jpg[/img]

[img]http://images.tomshardware.com/2006/06/05/geforce_7950_gx2/image011.gif[/img]

"Having a PS3 on a PCIe card" Priceless.

Really it is outstanding and insane for PS3 to be so under price and only cost 600 bucks

The equivalent PC GPU is $450, but the best CPU and motherboard for PC costs $1,400 and that isn't equal to Cell Broadband Engine. Though I read somewhere that Mercury Computer Systems will make the co-processor Cell run with a Intel Xeon on Windows XP. The config will cost you a lot of money.... $2000.

120fps

Maybe that is possible at 720p, but impossible at 1080p even for PS3.

But not all games need to have high framerates,

Exactly. RPGs, racing genre run great at 30 fps. First/Third Person Shooters and Fighting games need 60 fps. I've been living off PS2 racing games and RPGs for a long time so i am comfortable with 30 fps because it is all PS2 can handle.

there are a ton of PS3 games already at 60fps cool! I didn't know if "a ton" were running at 60 fps. I thought it was mostly 30 fps due to lack of programmer skill and experience with the hardware.

It sure would be interesting to see if Sony can make RSX and Cell on a single die the way they did with the EE in the Playstation Two Whoa. The EE is on a single die? That's amazing. Not even gamecube had that.

As for the RSX... yes it is teh pwnage

Yep. I agree.

The G71 architecture has been confirmed as "final"

Well G71 is a G70 with less transistors and less transistors means cheaper to manufacture. I wouldn't doubt it.

n two months we will se new nextgen directx10 nvidia gpu..

Just say Geforce 8800 GTX. It's better then "new nextgen directx10 nvidia gpu" 720p is low-resoltuon on a PC.

I'm afraid i have to agree. On a PC, nothing is acceptable below 1280x1024 unless the game can not run that high resolution in the first place. Such as Unreal Tournament, Diablo 2, Diablo, Dungeon Keeper, Simcity 2000, etc.

Claiming the PS2 wasn't technically better than a dreamcast is just stupid.

OMG. Who said that! Exceptions were Rayman 2 The Great Escape looked better then Rayman 2 Revolution and Grandia 2 on DC had better colors and had fps then Grandia 2 for PS2. I own these four games so i know what i am talking about.

et, PCs will jump even more than that before the end of the year!

Fine. PS3 has to come out sometime. Sony can't just delay with a G80, 512 MB GDDR3/512 MB XDR and a Cell at 4 GHz. It is in production so it doesn't get destroyed by Wii. It is good that all the consoles come out within a year of each other because none want their last generation system as their flagship system anymore. They don't want to loose ground in sales than they already have with obsolete platforms. It's funny really?

Who wants to buy PS2 or Gamecube anymore? Anyone. Heck, who wants to invest in SNES, NES, Genesis, Neo Geo anymore? Point taken. 16-bit consoles can not sell. 128-bit consoles can not sell for much longer.

There's only one more significant advantage for the PS3 over PCs

Okay so any PC with a Geforce 7950 GX2 is going to look like PS3 on a CRT monitor. The problem with your explanation is PS3 is having good exclusives from the same developers that made PS2 the best selling console of all time. You have your Madden NFL 200x, your Winning Eleven, your Devil May Cry, your Gran Turismo 4 HD, your Virtua Fighter, Tekken, Need for Speed Carbon, and the ability to play important 16-bit consoles....SNES, Genesis via Pgen and SNESstation, PS2PCE (Tgfx-16), It Might Be NES.

how is MS going to stay in the race for another 3-5 years?

I should really say i do not know, but i got some theories.

- a.) Do low-res video and use XMA (superset of WMA9) instead of DTS, use max texture compression
- b.) same as A with 1 DVD18. Technically still 1 DVD people.

Asus PhysX card.

Those things are expensive and doubling the RAM of your GPU will do the same thing. This is for if you just spent $450 on a GPU and want 20 fps better anyways. So I'd just buy a card with a gig of RAM (GDDR3) on it.

Simple, why would any one pay 500 to 600 dollars for a G80 when the PS3 can get a same performance and Play Blue ray Movies ect, for the same amount?

um...yeah. The PS3 has a G70 and blu-ray drive. And we know it won't have both a G80 and DVD-ROM. It's improbable because the Geforce 8800 alone is $500 at launch or worse offline where Best Buy charges $70 more. (price of the G7950 GX2 now)

Million dollar blog! (2006-09-26 18:32)

I drove over to Stillwater, meet with my job employer than to Circuit City in Woodbury where I got interviewed. I had a list of most of what i can do on a computer. The manager was only 20 and he had the online job summit print off. It looked like a normal Circuit City with a lot of HDTVs, computer hardware, videogames of 5 different platforms, and a lot of lights.

If that doesn't work then I may be able to get into Target, Best Buy, Game Stop and a Cineima so i can work so i can get paid.

This will steal time a way from my Playstation 2 because I am finishing Xenosaga Episode 3. This game is the last game in the franchise if you don't count Xenogears time line wise. May be on the floor talking to people explaining the best thing.

If I worked at Circuit City I could buy PS3 the first day. Am only $50 sort of $500.

I found out my Modblog page is worth $2,258.16

My blog is worth $1,129,258.16.

Unquestionably believe that which you said.

Your favorite justification appeared to be on the internet the easiest thing to be aware of.

I say to you, I certainly get annoyed while people consider worries that they plainly don't know about. You managed to hit the nail upon the top and also defined out the whole thing without having side-effects , people can take a signal. Will likely be back to get more. Thanks

Wisconsin Werewolf (2006-10-07 19:43)

They even made a low budget indie film on it that appeared on the Sci-Fi Channel today.

The Beast of Bray Road (or the Bray Road Beast) is a legendary creature present in the folklore of Elkhorn, Wisconsin since the late 1980s.

Nobody has yet brought forth any physical evidence of the Beast of Bray Road that would definitively prove what it is. As a result, there are only theories about the true identity of the creature.

Paranormal researcher Todd Roll said that there may have been a connection with the werewolf to the occult activities and mutilated animals (which may have been animal sacrifices) in Walworth County.

Another paranormal theory is the Native American legends of the skin-walkers.

A number of animal-based theories have also been proposed. They include:

The creature is an undiscovered variety of wild dog

It is a cryptid named the Shunka Warakin (a hyena or wolf-like beast)

It is the waheela (a giant prehistoric wolf similar to Amarok)

It is a wolfdog or a coydog, possibly one that had been trained to stand upright before becoming feral

It must also be noted that some of the sightings have been at night where the witnesses only briefly saw some creature while driving, thus leaving their minds to fill in the blanks.

The first werewolf sighting to go public occurred (perhaps fittingly) on October 31, 1999. A young woman named Doristine Gipson, from nearby Elkhorn, was driving along Bray Road near Delavan. As she neared the intersection of Hospital Road, she leaned over to change the station on her radio when she felt her right front tire jump off the ground as if she had hit something. Concerned, she stopped the car and got out to see what it was. Finding nothing on the roadway behind her car, she began to look around. As she peered into the darkness, she suddenly saw a dark, hairy form racing toward her. She did not see what the figure looked like from the distance at which she was standing (about 50 feet) but she did see the figure was quite bulky and she would later compare the form to someone who works out continually with weights. Startled by the oncoming form, and by the sounds of its "heavy feet", she quickly retreated to her car. She jumped in and was attempting to drive away when the beast jumped onto her trunk. Luckily, it was too wet for the creature to hang on and it fell off onto the pavement. Doristine returned to the site later on that evening with a young girl that she was taking out trick-or-treating and saw a large form on the side of the road. When she saw the creature moving, she ordered the child to lock her door and drove quickly away from the scene.

She had no idea what she had seen but wondered if perhaps it might be a bear, angry because she had struck it with her car. Regardless, she told a neighbor about the encounter the next day and showed her the scratched car. As word spread, more local people began to step forward with their own encounters with the beast, dating back to 1989.

One night in the fall of that year, 24 year old bar manager Lorianne Endrizzi was rounding a curve on Bray Road (just a half mile from the site of the later incident) and saw what she thought was a person kneeling and hunched over on the side of the road. When she slowed down, she took a closer look at the figure on the passenger side of the car. She was no more than six feet away from it at the time. The sighting lasted for about 45 seconds and she stated that she clearly saw a beast with grayish, brown hair, fangs and pointed ears. "His face was ... long and snouty, like a wolf". She also noted that even though the car's headlights were pointed ahead down the roadway, the creature's eyes glowed with a yellowish color, just like an animal's will do when reflected car lights. Like Doris Gipson, she also saw how wide and powerful the creature's chest and build were. She went on to add that the arms of the beast were rather strange. They were jointed as a man's would be and it seemed to be holding food with its palms upward, completely like any animal that she had ever heard of. The arms were muscular ("like a man who had worked out a little bit") and the creature seemed to have human-like fingers with claws on the ends. She did not notice any sort of tail but did say that its back legs were behind it, like a person would be if kneeling.

Endrizzi was completely unnerved by the sighting. She later stated in an interview that the creature "appeared to be so human-like that it was scary." Her own answer to what she had seen was that it had been a "freak of nature". She had no idea what it could have been until she saw a book at the library that had an illustration of a werewolf in it. It so closely resembled what she had seen on Bray Road that her "eyes popped out" of her head.

After hearing Doris Gipson's account by way of rumor, Endrizzi contacted the Lakeland Animal Shelter and her mother contacted a local newspaper writer named Linda Godfrey, hoping that publicity might encourage other people who had encountered the creature to come forward. The story that followed was published on December 29, 1991 and while it contained basic information about the Gipson and Endrizzi sightings (using pseudonyms for the two women), it also included some scanty information on other sightings. It also mentioned that chickens had been stolen and then another family who lived near Bray Road had experienced their own close encounter with the beast. Karen Bowey, who actually lived along Bowers Road, stated that her daughter Heather (age 11) had seen the creature back in 1989. They had been playing outside and though they had spotted a large dog - until it stood up. She mentioned the odd shape of its back legs and the speed at which it could move. The county humane officer, John Frederickson, told the reporter that he believed the creature was a "coyote" but he did concede that there were a lot of people who believed that they had seen something out of the ordinary. He admitted that he was not sure what to make of it.

Predictably, large media outlets picked up the story and the witnesses began to suffer from practical jokes and laughter. Werewolf signs were planted in front yards and werewolf parties became common, even at the bar where Endrizzi worked. Monster t-shirts were sold and tourists cruised up and down Bray Road, hoping for a glimpse of the creature. As time went by though, the excitement decreased and the temper of the community began to wear thin. Despite all of the jokes and humor, there was still an undercurrent of fear in Delavan and Elkhorn. Something was going on out in the vicinity of Bray Road and soon people began to whisper about other things as well.

Just the summer before the wolf creature had been reported, a dozen or so animals had been dumped in a ditch along nearby Willow Road. John Frederickson, the humane officer from Delavan, stated that he believed several of the animals had been used in cult rituals. While Linn police chief James Jensen dismissed this idea in June 1991, Frederickson insisted that officials were missing the point. According to the officer, some of the animals had ropes tied around their back legs and their throats were slit, some were decapitated and others were dismembered in various ways. The most recently killed animal was a dog that had its chest cavity split open and its heart removed. Several of the animals matched descriptions of recently missing pets and they certainly had not been killed by passing cars. The mutilated carcasses were almost immediately covered up - literally. The site was quickly bulldozed, ending Frederickson's investigation but it did not end the whispers and rumors that followed.

Other reports began to reach Frederickson that summer as well. Rumors were passed on about humane officer imposters who pursued stray dogs. One incident also involved an unidentified man in a black uniform (driving a large black car) who attempted to intimidate a child who was home alone into giving up his black Labrador Retriever. Around this same time, there were also reports of occult graffiti being found in an abandoned house and at the local cemetery, where graves markers were also found to be covered with candle wax. The abandoned house was located just a quarter-mile off Bray Road. This led many to ponder whether the satanic activity and the Bray Road Beast were in some way connected. The strange stories and animal carcasses had been whispered about and discovered just a few months before the first sightings of the monster had been publicized - but the beast was apparently in the vicinity long before that.

An earlier sighting of "something" was made by a dairy farmer from Elkhorn named Scott Bray, who reported seeing a "strange looking dog" in his pasture near Bray Road in September or October of 1989. He said that the beast was larger and taller than a German Shepherd and had pointed ears, a hair tail and long gray and black hair. He added that it was built very heavy in the front, as if it had a strong chest. He followed the "dog" to a large pile of rocks but the creature had vanished. He did find that it had left behind huge footprints though, which disappeared into the grass of the pasture.

Russell Gest of Elkhorn also reported seeing the creature about the same time as the Scott Bray sighting. He was about a block or so away from an overgrown area and when he heard weeds being rustled, he looked up to see a creature emerge from the thicket. It was standing on its hind feet and then took two "wobbly" steps forward before Gest began to run away. He looked back to see that the creature was now on all fours, but it never gave chase. After a short distance, it wandered off in the direction of Bray Road. Gest said that the creature was much larger than a German Shepherd and was covered with black and grayish hair. While standing upright, it appeared to be about five feet tall. It had an oversized dog or wolf-like head with a big neck and wide shoulders. The animal's form was mostly dog-like, leading Gest to surmise that it was some sort of dog-wolf hybrid.

Around Christmas 1990, Heather Bowey had her previously mentioned encounter. She had no idea that she had seen the same thing as Doris Gipson until she heard the young woman talking about on the school bus. The driver, Pat Lester, (who happened to be Lori Endrizzi's mother - coincidence?), listened to the girl's story and passed it on to Linda Godfrey. The reporter then contacted Karen Bowey, also a school bus driver, and then mentioned the sighting in the newspaper. Heather elaborated on the encounter to Scarlett Sankey.

The sighting occurred around 4:30 pm as Heather and several friends were returning home from sledding near Loveland Road (about a mile and a half southeast of the intersection of Bray and Hospital Roads). They happened to look up and see what appeared to be a large dog walking along a creek in snow-covered cornfield. Heather estimated that it was about a block away from them. Thinking that it was a dog, the children began calling to it. The creature looked at them and then it stood up on its hind legs. She described it as being covered with long "silverfish-like- brownish" hair. The beast took four awkward steps in their direction and then dropped down on all fours and began to run at the children in what Heather later described as being "a bigger leap than dogs run." It followed the group about halfway to the Bowey home (about 250 yards away) before it ran off in another direction.

In March 1990, an Elkhorn dairy farmer named Mike Etten spotted something unusual along Bray Road one early morning around 2:00 am. In the moonlight, Etten (who admitted that he had been drinking at the time) saw a dark-haired creature that was bigger than a dog, just a short distance from the Hospital Road intersection. Whatever the creature was, it was sitting "like a raccoon sits", using its front paws to hold onto something that it was eating. As he passed by the creature, it lifted its head and looked at him. He described the head as being thick and wide, with snout that was not as long as a dog's. The body was covered with dark, thick hair and its legs were big and thick. Not being able to identify the animal, Etten assumed that it was a bear. However, when the other sightings of the Bray Road Beast were made public in 1991, he had to reconsider this assumption.

One of the last reported encounters with the creature occurred in early February 1992. It happened around 10:30 pm on Highway H, about six miles southwest of the Bray and Hospital Roads intersection. A young woman named Tammy Bray, who worked for a retirement home, was driving along when a large, dog-like animal crossed the road in front of her. She quickly punched the brakes and slide to a stop, just about the same time that the creature turned and looked at her. She described the creature as have a board chest and pointed ears and being covered with matted brown and black fur. The narrow nose, thick neck and shining yellow eyes of the beast quickly convinced her that she was not looking at any sort of dog. Finally, it continued on, unafraid, across the road and she noted that it walked "strong in front, more slouchy, sloppy-like in the rear." Tammy drove home and hurried into the house to tell her husband, Scott Bray, that she had seen the same animal that he had earlier seen in their pasture.

The sightings eventually died out but the strangeness that seemed to envelope the region took a little longer to fade. In January 1992, just as furor over the Bray Road Beast sightings was starting to quiet down, a local "reputable businessman" told reporter Linda Godfrey that he had seen two bright lights emitting sparks and moving erratically across the sky above Delavan. Later that spring, four or five horses that were pastured near Elkhorn were found with their throats slashed. John Frederickson, who investigated, was quoted as saying that "They were almost surgical-type wounds". And then after that, things became eerily quiet.

So, what was the Bray Road Beast? Neither a coyote or the native red wolf can really match the descriptions that were given of the creature, despite humane officer John Frederickson's comments that a coyote might rear up on its hind legs before running, explaining several witnesses' claims that it walked on two legs. A gray wolf would be much larger than a red wolf but are not generally found in the area. In addition, gray wolves are much narrower in the chest than the Bray Road creature was reported to be and wolves are shy of humans and despite the matching yellow eyes, would not attack a car as the creature from the Doris Gipson encounter did. The creature simply resembled no known animals, but alternately was compared to dogs, bears and wolves. According to Jerome Clark, Dan Groebner of the International Wolf Research Center in Ely, Minnesota stated that the creature could not be a wild wolf.

Witnesses also insisted that it was not a dog, although some suggested that it could have been a wolf-dog hybrid of some sort. But how does this explain the creature's habit of kneeling, walking on two legs and holding onto food with the flat of its paws turned upward? Also, Lori Endrizzi claimed that the animal had human-like fingers! The idea that the monster may have been a bear is also called into question. While bears do occasionally walk for short distances on two legs, they do not hold food with their palms up, do not jump onto moving cars and very rarely do they pursue or try to attack humans.

So, what could it have been? To find possible answers to that, we have to look outside of the normal confines of zoology. Researcher Richard Hendricks points to a creature that was suggested by Loren Coleman and Jerome Clark called the “shunka warak’in”. The creature was said to have lived in the wilds of the Upper Midwest and was a wolf-like animal that was known to the Native American population and to the early settlers in the region. The creature was named by the Ioway Indians and its name meant “carrying-off dogs”. Little is known for sure about the creature but apparently it was quite fierce and for awhile, a mounted specimen of one was exhibited at various times in the west Yellowstone area and in a small museum near Henry Lake in Idaho. Interestingly, the dog-hyena type creature fits many of the descriptions of witnesses in southeastern Wisconsin, including its strange look (which would have made many compare it to a wolf or a god mix), its dark shaggy fur and a sloping weakness to its back legs, which was noted in almost every report.

But even if we accept the possibility that this creature could have been one of the rare, and possibly extinct “shunka warak’in”, then how do we still explain the fact that it picked up its food with its paws (hands?) and walked about on two legs. If the Bray Road Beast was real - it had to have been some sort of creature that has never been classified before.

Or more incredible to believe, a genuine werewolf! Investigator Todd Roll was quick to point out the hints that there may have been an occult connection to the Bray Road Beast. The discovery of the mutilated animal carcasses and the occult activity at the cemetery and the abandoned house coincided with the sightings of the monster in the region. Do we dare consider the idea that the beast was a shape shifter of some sort, blending between man and wolf?

There is also one more theory that we have to consider - that the entire thing could have been an elaborate hoax. Notwithstanding the fact that Doris Gipson’s encounter took place on Halloween, there were other problems as well. The most obvious issue to cause suspicion was the relationships between all of those involved in the case. Endrizzi’s mother, Pat Lester, is a central figure in the case. In addition to being one witness’ mother, she was also Gipson’s neighbor and drove the school bus that Gipson, Heather Bowey and Russell Gest rode. Heather’s mother was also a school bus driver. Tammy Bray was also a friend of Pat Lester’s daughter and the wife of Scott Bray. It was also Lester who took the initiative to contact the newspaper about the sightings. However, it should be strongly pointed out that Lester never tried to influence the reports of the witnesses. It seems more likely that she was simply in a position to hear about the encounters and her interest and compassion towards those involved helped to encourage them to go public.

So, could they have been making the whole thing up? Sure, they could have been, but it doesn’t seem likely, especially based on the fact that no one had anything to gain by making the sightings public - other than ridicule and embarrassment, which is hardly an incentive to make your story known.

As time has passed, the investigation into the case has grown cold and with no further sightings of the Bray Road Beast to continue the news story, the papers have fallen silent. One has to wonder if we will ever know the truth of what happened in southeastern Wisconsin between 1989 and 1992 for the mystery, at this point, remains unsolved.

I went to circuit city, and i'm working in a warehouse and I needed steel-toed shoes so i got that. I also got heavy duty kakies. This person seemed nice, not dumb. Probably above average iq. Lets say i know mine and where a genius starts (130 pt) and I see a lot of expensive Samsung blu-ray ($999.99) and 1080p HDTVs ($1500) in it. Since there was steel toe requirement in the warehouse, i couldn't do work Wednesday. My job coach, John, is nice and he'll help me keep my personality in check, remember stuff, and i didn't take up a job coach in Assurant and lost my job the 2nd day!

Oh and one more thing, Final Fantasy 12 comes out on my Birthday. I'm asking for a Geforce 7950 GX2 or Geforce 7950 GTX PCIe GPU which may be in my computer by Nov 1st. Better frame rate.

PS3 Yellow Dog Linux Details (2006-10-26 22:24)

The most exciting time for being a gamer is the upcoming year or so. It's difficult to assess this generation simply because I can have both of PS3 and Xbox 360. That's like not an issue. Too me, the same PS2 publishers are developing for PS3. The Xbox 360 developers that released games are already above average in terms of console with 5 titles scoring over 9.0 (Elder Scrolls IV, Project Gotham 3, GRAW, Splinter Cell Double Agent, Dead or Alive 4).with more scoring above 8.0 (Kameo, Burnout Revenge, Winning Eleven 2007, Condemned Criminal Origin, Perfect Dark Zero, Moto GP 2006, Need for Speed Most Wanted) Games are getting increasing complex to comprehend, but that hasn't stopped me! Resistance Fall of Man and Metal Gear Solid 4 look complex to play. If Final Fantasy XIII plays anything like Final Fantasy X...I may beat it. Final Fantasy was medium hard for me and I don't play games every day.

It's not about Wii being too simple, it's the graphics looking cheesy with so many E rated software. Mario Galaxy? Give me a break! Metroid Prime 3? Not exactly looking fun anymore. Back to PS3, it has graphics equivanant of a Geforce 7600 . And that Yellow Dog Linux 5.0 included should bring back memories of Commodore 64 which had a UHF adapter for TV hookup.

Yellow Dog Linux 5 features

- Linux kernel version 2.6.14
 - Basic 64-bit development and runtime support.
 - X.org 6.8.2, featuring improved Radeon dual-head support.
 - KDE 3.5.3 and GNOME 2.14.
 - Firefox and Thunderbird 1.504.

- OpenOffice 2.02
- A completely rebuilt KDE and Gnome "start" menu for vastly improved navigation of the graphical user interface.

GNOME 2.14 looks so pretty! Download it!

Downloaded OpenSuse Linux 10.2 Alpha 5 x86-64 DVD ISO for the fancy taskbar menu that slides. I only installed default KDE selection which didn't include a image viewer or Ksnapshot (but The Gimp had PRINT SCREEN like command). Installed Gstreamer to play advanced audio coding files. Extracted Firefox 2 tarball, but Suse wouldn't let me execute it forcing me to use Firefox 1.5.0.7 instead. Yast is disabled.

7950 GX2 Owned! (2006-11-02 16:17)

What is shark teeth? It is Nvidia Geforce cards these days...that's what it is. Despite the attention on the Geforce 8800 DirectX 10 card, I went ahead and bought a Geforce 7950 GX2 over the Geforce 7950 GT for the MPEG4 ASP, MPEG4 AVC, MPEG2 and WMA/VC-1 hardware decompression plus near state-of-the-art fps in graphics (not counting DX10 cards bud). You never ever win with these things, but you know what? I'm stupid and picked out the best card I saw at Tigerdirect .com so I could keep my hardcore PC Gamer status as well as buying a PS3 down the road.

Can someone just congratulate me because truthfully I have not a soul to show it off too. It's going to get fucking outdated before I can show the damn thing off! I'm pissed off. I can't show it off via imageshack just yet!

Yes, I wanted the damn thing so badly. It has a 1 GB GDDR3 with dual G71 core circuit boards so I'm not stupid buying an exotic DirectX 9 card despite Vista/DX10 around the corner. Is smart buying the 1st gigabyte videocard in Tigerdirect's top ten list? That's what I did.

Either spend $250 on a performance level Geforce 7950 GT to be able to afford a PS3 on the third week of November or take pride in my gaming rid and give it some love (like installing Geforce 7950 GX2 for example). I rarely get chances to buy things off Tigerdirect.

Nippion Ichi games working on the PC (2006-11-03 23:17)

One day I may play Ratchet and Clank Going Commando or Up Your Arsenal at 1600x1200 on a futuristic PC with a futuristic build of PCSX2 possibly on WinVista and possibly a Geforce 9800 GTX (technically it can emulate it in game now at 5 fps or 6 fps. The FMV works with FFDSHow installed.

1280x960 already at 30 fps!

But in 6-8 years, people will have DVD images on their PC HDD with this emulator and the PS1 emulation isn't ready yet...you still require EPSXE. The only PS2 games worth ripping is the nippon ichi strategy RPGs, Stella Deus, atelier Iris 1 & 2 since they all play at 30 fps.

Meanwhile I have problems downloading Panzer Dragoon Saga CD image rar archieve so I gave up. The available nodes didn't do a thing and if I even messaged one for that file, but they don't respond, only logged off.

The Geeky 8800 GTX vs. inexpensive Consoles (2006-11-10 07:37)

I'll make this short 'n sweet. Today, I bought overkill graphics processing unit called the 8800 GTX instead of previous choice 8800 GTS and 7950 GX2. Why? WinVista; owning some DirectX 10 game (Hellgate: London). The 1080p PC games make my mouth water I guess.

Now, you budget people (was me, but after reading Geforce 8800 reviews I changed) would most likely prefer an Xbox 360 due to the $400 investing for 2 - 3 years down the road. I originally thought this way too, but I decided that Xbox 360 wasn't enough so 8800 GTX and PS3 are included for selection In December when I financially able to buy PS3 instead of buying Battlefield 2142, Gears of War, and Final Fantasy 12 because those games just decrease my spending power and I DON'T NEED THREE MORE. There are 50 games that I never played. Furthermore, I had a N64 since I was 12, and a Dreamcast since 14 so it's normal to continue the videogame trend.

PC games certainly has big teenager population from my knowledge. Diablo 2 and World of Warcraft is all they ever play (especially Circuit City employees). I played Diablo 2 six years ago too. It is the best selling MMORPG ever! Then you got Xfire (my account: renegadeviking) where young men like to join games in LAN/internet clans and massacre enemies and/or get shot at in first person shooter. The Diablo 2 with this messenger doesn't work very well. People never join my server. It proves you logged in as many hours as you claim you did in Diablo 2 though which is sort of nice.

Consoles are inexpensive and display low resolutions on larger screens than my monitor (AKA 25" LCD TV over 19" CRT monitor). That's because it's sold at a loss, and sells more than any PC model (Commodore 64 emulation doesn't count) Then I own all these above average games that use most of the "console specs". Also the 8800 GTX is a legitime birthday present.

Queuing Up Storm (2006-11-16 12:13)

I woke up this morning hoping to get a PS3. On Wednesday, there were two people camping out in tents by the entrance of Circuit City. The lines are very long and it's pointless, at 12:24pm, to go to any department store because there are enough people queuing that any PS3 will sell out.

At Shop Ko there were two queuing since 11pm last night. At New Richmond Wal-mart, there were five queuing since 11pm last night. At Hudson Wal-mart there were 4 queuing since 11pm last night. Proving PS3 is more popular than xbox 360 or Nintendo Wii. Haven't checked target, but I woke up this morning hoping to get a PS3. On Friday, I got to touch a 20 lbs PS3 box and look the back. Touch it before any greedy queuers got it.

But I got the Geforce 8800 GTX installed yesterday for free. The Geforce 8800 GTX is technically beter than PS3. Has more RAM, new API, plays directX 9.0c games great.

MEANWHILE I BOUGHT GEARS OF WAR YESTERDAY, which is a massive technical achievement for Xbox 360 having a better score (9.4) than Resistance Fall of Man (9.0) or Marvel Ultimate Alliance (7.9)

NO friends came over as usual. Randy is listening to country while Bob is listening to rock of some kind. I got many rock bands from him in fact. I started Guild Wars Nightfall again and joined a guild finally for the first time ever (since 2005). I was in Ashward Ashley and there were plenty of people around there. I lost a few levels. Nobody will game with me! Then the guild leader of [B]The Weekend Guild Wars People[/B] of 71 members helped me complete a few quests. It's medium sized one. Anyways, the safe zones has sections between Americans and Europeans. So far nobody really invites with me. It's alright. Maybe not as good as World of Warcraft, but I don't have to pay monthly fee...cos that is a pain. I wonder how the bandwidth would work on 256K upload? Guild Wars has been laggy.

Denying they had a rom collection (2006-12-05 14:15)

DAMN IT!

I said in WORK (Circuit City) that i had a 400 rom collection, and no body cares! They were't suppose too, but they do it too and they don't like me! I know they download Roms and don't admit it.

I had this in a blog entry that people don't care that I have roms because they have roms (meaning they don't like to have a conversation /w me about it)

Go here and post your rom collection list

What? You got another one? Ghez (2006-12-10 15:45)

I was at the Game Stop today buying a PS3 & PS3 game, so I asked the clerk if I could have the wii remote to play it for the first time.

First I was really crappy at it. I thought the Dpad was used for turning, but not before figuring out to turn it side ways. This took me only 20 seconds. Then I start rocking the controller back and forth like a steering wheel. The game feels a lot like Wave Race Blue Storm with the water effects and the control. (yes, I know it comes from Excite Bike 64 having played the rom myself).

I don't see how revolutionary (but it is) the controller is. I used to lean sideways on corners when i was a young. Nintendo stoled the idea from that! They watched some ADDHD kid play Wave Race Blue Storm (how he exaggerates his body)

Blu-ray is loosing Race for all the wrong reasons! (2006-12-10 17:56)

Blu-ray supports are the minority because Sony has limited Bluray manufacturing in Sony Vaio laptop? I dont' care what he says. I'm getting BDRWs in my PC someday!

Lets see

25 GB BD

15 GB HDDVD

BDR $20

HDDVDR can't find any!

emm which one will i choose? smiley I know...the BDR! (and the fact there is a DL-HDDVDR doesn't matter since all BDRW drives are dual layer)

As a movie format...the BD-ROM & HD-DVD are the same resolution. Compression matters here. People can not disapprove BD-ROM is a shitty format because all the movies use MPEG2 HD while HD-DVD uses VC1!

That is like PS3 uses MPEG in 720p and complaining there isn't enough data space on the BD therefore it is god awful!

I have Talladega Nights Ballet of Ricky Bobby already

He is ranked #10 on [URL="http://www.alexa.com/data/details/traffic_details?url=http %3A %2F %2Fwww.efx2.com"]this site[/URL] Why aren't I allowed there? Am I too dumb? I got the source code on my computer and can compile it with my pirated version of MS Visual Studio 2003

And the MPEG2 FMV is working great. I think the emu has source code in it now.

Evo:Phase One stole controller idea from Nyko! (2006-12-28 11:01)

The forth console is a PC even though the PC is officially the forth competitor anyways. Ironical isn't it?
Here is what it looks like....

The controller really looks like the Nyko Airflow PC, one of the best analog controllers out for PC. I own this and use it for my emulators. Sturdy, looks a lot like Dual Shock 2.

Brian and David came over: Seemed like forever (2006-12-31 14:40)

Yesterday, must've been the best moment in two months (even more so than getting a job) because my cousins (both in Navy/Marine service) came over so we could play both Xbox 360 and PS3. It was a family reunion and my Uncle kept menacing about making him audio cds /w AD-PCM. I told him if I added it to FAT32 it won't work in most CD players due to nothing I had would keep AD-PCM as is.

While I had two younger cousins, 13 and 12 playing Call of Duty 2, and Need for Speed Most Wanted on the xbox 360. That was fun for them while I knew nothing. David and I played Ridge Racer 7 in another room. David says Japanese listen to a lot of trance so this is some of their music. He doesn't care about what the game plays...so I just let the music play. I haven't seen David since 2004 so it was that made me happy the whole day.

Resistance Fall of Man and Gears of War were really fun with playing Brian whom haven't seen for two years. He is 20 years old, and on leave from his San Fran marine boot camp. Brian is slightly better at games than I am and has better communication skills. I got to the part where Brian and I barely made it pass level 3: Spires. One of my problems is I only used a frag grenade once to take care of the stockers that I loose $\frac{1}{2}$ my vitality. I made it easy so I could get the control right and so Brian could advance quicker.

There was a Christmas tree so everybody opened presents except me who was downstairs. Nobody really cares for me...I get a $10 Subway gift card and i gave both Brian and David $20. I spent too much on PS3 this month. I did get a partially paid Xbox 360 controller out of the whole thing so I came out ahead.

David promised he could come over Tuesday, and play Gears of war with me again. Otherwise we could go to McDonalds or he could get me a girlfriend. On a second thought, fuck girlfriends...they don't want some guy with bad communication skills around them. Someday maybe.

David beat me at Need for Speed Most Wanted in both racing Japanese cars in circuits and drag races. After I tried playing Gears of War with him then again with Brian. I also got beaten in RR7 because he could get his nitris gage full quicker doing better drift, and yet i won 2 races of of the four against him.

My systemax pc is deprived of Guild Wars lately. I've been occupied with Final Fantasy XII lately (around the part where i sneak into the palace – not very far). It's a very good game, but that much is widely known. It was on the bottom of IGN and Gamespot websites in the hottest games on the bottom. No surprise. It's the 2nd largest Japanese developer's flagship title.

Today, I decided to play Final Fantasy 12 and download more Shoutcast streams via Ripcast so my bandwidth this month is used up more. Since Wildblue rocketed Wildblue-1 (satellite) last month, connections have been a lot more reliable (except when you download 1.5 GB in one day like i have). David quoted, "it is faster than dial-up. What he doesn't know is dial up isn't suppose to exist...it's far more privative than DSL. We are the last known places in the world that has dial up.

Suse 10.2 loaded (2006-12-31 22:25)

KDE 3.5.5 again

Gnome 2.6.0 again

replaced all my OpenSuse 10.2 Alpha 5 /w OpenSuse 10.2. Have yet to install nVidia driver on the Systemax Hellcat, because it's running a very new GPU. I am still having problems why sound and WiFi worked in Suse 10.0 and not in Suse 10.2? Mystery.

I still plan to use Windows XP until mid next year. There really isn't any point in running the glitchy WinVista until Service Pack 1. You may of guessed it, but I am not using Suse at the moment of writing this. I wanted the pretty desktops so that's why I downloaded 7.27 GiB yesterday so i can be more like the Europeans (Suse is German) who hate Windows. European Union fined Microsoft once because Windows Media Player came with WMA/WMV encoders & decoders. It's unfair, but WMA and WMV are monopolies in a sence otherwise Blu-ray and HD-DVD wouldn't have VC-1 (WMV9 Pro) or WMA in portable mp3 players and car stereo decks.

9.1 January

V-22 (2007-01-10 17:00)

So I'm a little slow on these aircraft....actually I've been asking my cousin, David, on the phone if he's gonna be working on a V22 because he works on Blackhawk helicopters in Japan (he's on leave now) and he said no (I thought that before since these things look beyond his comprehension to maintain correctly).

[url=<http://youtube.com/watch?v=mbn3WancX6g>]Here is one crashing in 1990.[/url]

Ouch. I don't expect this aircraft/UFO to be as expensive as teh F-22 Raptor (which i thought was most expensive aircraft for a while before i saw a B2 while seeing a model at Circuit City)

What's the point of a $2,000,000,000 Bomber! (2007-01-10 17:01)

If the USAF is not going to use the B2 Spirit in actual wars when why the heck did the USAF order 21 of them? If the F-117A or B52 don't do the job, which will never happen. Come on, Gov, what's the point in putting 1.5 - 2 Billion down the drain times 21! I still don't understand our government's thinking. Oh, wait! I get it...

Okay, it's none of my business.

Sure looks futuristic though.

I was inside the Metrodome! | look at the awesome "Viking's Stadium" (2007-01-15 09:54)

I rode to the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome to look at a home appliance convention dealing with bathtubs, chairs, shutters, new advances in gutter technology, and it was the first time I've been on the field of the Metrodome and 2nd time I've ever been to the Metrodome. Viking's new stadium (seats 68,000) in Blaine, MN will be larger (seats 64,000) than the Metrodome despite claims it will seat 4,000 less. I thought it was boring. Rumors are it will be priced triple ($675 million) the TCF Bank Stadium (future home of the MN Gophers, seats 50,200) set to open on September 12, 2009. I could sit in any seat I wanted too yesterday! We have a chocolate lab that gets weird on us if we keep it in the bedroom because it is sensitive to scowling. Though i never hear the end of my mom's plead not to leave it in the bedroom. I am still playing Final Fantasy 12 because I am definitely not into games as much. Videogames don't get you girlfriends. Circuit City fired me because that store is going thru some tough times, and it wasn't my attendance or behavior. I called David, Randy, Bob and nobody answers their phone! I want to do something outta the house, but they may not come due to the blizzard last night.

TCF Bank Stadium

Viking's Stadium (better than ¾ the world's soccer stadiums!)

If I were to buy a videogame, the most excellent choice may be Castlevania Portrait of Ruin. C:OoR got a 9.0 out of 10 at IGN and a 8.0 at GameSpot. I don't know if I'll get the Level 5 RPG, Rogue Galaxy coming out at the end of January. Save that for February because hopefully I'll get $160 added to my account so affording it not an issue. Finally, I bought Rainbow Six Vegas for $40 eight days ago. It's probably a lot of fun like the online review said.

Anonymous (2008-04-30 14:15:00)

ok the viking stadium isn't going to be built in Blaine anymore. The Vikings have decided that they want the new stadium to be built on the site of the metrodome.

Intro FMV

Dragon Force is the best Working Designs game for Saturn. Of course it's forgotten. (Got 9.1 at Gamespot)

Magic Knight Rayearth is a horrible game, but for some reason it got #1 at Gamerankings.com. The intro FMV is horribly girly. (Got 5.5 at Gamespot)

X

Guardian Heroes is a RPG by Treasure who has fame of Raliant Silvergun (Saturn) and Bangai-O (Dreamcast) (got 9.0 at Gamespot)

NFL in London next season: Teams unconfirmed (2007-01-20 11:28)

According to NFL.com, two regular season games will appear at Wembley Stadium, London, UK. The NFL is working closely with the London city consul to make it a satisfying experience for Americans in UK at the time or curious Londoners. The future of NFL Europa is looking good for German sports so maybe that success can come to London for two games. It will be broadcasted in UK and Fox Sports Net.

The NFL staged its first regular-season game outside of the United States in 2005 when 103,467 people saw the Arizona Cardinals play the San Francisco 49ers in Mexico City on October 2 – the largest crowd for a regular-season game in NFL history.

Maybe if this works, football can have world-wide fanfare so it's not only North America that plays it.

Improved PS2 experience & my 2nd X360 (2007-01-25 11:24)

Since I am comfortable with version 1.3 after figuring out there is no need to upgrade. It shall be noted that Sony fixed the picture quality of PS2 games on PS3 in the newest firmware update (v1.5) so it looks exactly like a PS2 game running on PS2. Minor updates are you can also delete any backup file and ability to swap credit cards or debit cards before downloading PS games onto HDD. I use PS2 to play Final Fantasy 12 because memory cards aren't compatible with PS3 w/o buying expensive accessory/converter. Remember I'm jobless.

Also I had a grounding issue with teh Xbox 360 this week and had to use my warrentee to get a new one /w only $35 spent. It happened the last time my cousin david came over to play Need for Speed Most Wanted on Xbox 360, and I powered it without video cable. It started powering off every 5 minutes so my new one works fine.

My job status is a little rough, I called all three Game Stops in my area asking for employment positions.....no currently. I sorta want to work at a game store so i can add a few more games to my collection. Looking at Rogue Galaxy and Ar tonelico (unless it is really a 6.8 out of 10). I logged onto Minnesota Job Bank website and summited three positions at Keystone Computer Solutions to my job coach. I haven't checked Hi Score (game store) in Stillwater yet.

Developers claim PS3 Doesn't have 1080p hardware scaling (2007-01-30 17:13)

Yes, developers are really stupid, but the latest SDK adds partial support for it. Didn't Sony bring this part up a year ago? Yeah it was in the tech specs. Do the developers create this shit up for attention? They probably do. Wouldn't want to end up like me with no comments. They fear what I been thru. A eternity without many comments. That would mean blog death. Of course the create crazy stuff like this. So the preimere PS3 message board outside IGN had a thread on this touchy topic. And of course PS2 games won't be upscaled to 1080p because those games would look horribly jaggy.

Iraqi War bias on PS3forums.com (2007-02-01 23:34)

I have to post on this forum since catharton electronica is sluggish, uninteresting, and sort of dead and ps3forums (despite loving Gears of War and Resistance Fall of Man) are against the Iraqi War, and think US is some sort of evil country for invading Afghanistan. How may I think like a European when I am in America itself? I agree it's sort of hard to be anti-patriot. Do I have to let them get away with it? Just because we use Nuclear dust, and cluster bombs in Gulf War and Afghanistan doesn't mean we're an evil country. These kids don't get it. This must be one of those "I hate America's Army...therefore I am popular and right" people. These members know there is nothing they can do about teh war except ask why there isn't peace?

Another topic they brought up for views is Iran-made Nukes. They ask why Iran can't have Nukes and America can. I responded, because Iran will eventually use it and it'll lead to nuclear fallout (read the wikipedia entry and see if you like it) and they thought i was some crazy motherfucker. They believe it won't happen. Why the fuck do you think we keep our nukes in our damn silos with the lids sealed or disabled in our engaging stock pile for so long for? Insurance? <http://ps3forums.com/showthread.php?t=51848> dude, you just don't get debate. Who are you to judge whether Iran will use it's nukes? What makes the USA (and UK for that matter) the best people to decide the intent of another country?

Of course no-one wants Iran to have nukes because they believe that they will use them, but that's the very reason why Iran want them coz they think America will use theirs! Mutually Assured Destruction.

"just because we use nuclear dust and cluster bombs doesn't make us evil" err yeah it does, cluster bombs regularly kill innocent people due to their larhe spread of payload and "nuclear dust" (do you mean depleted uranium?) well that just leaves a lovely legacy of radiation poisoning for the sad few soles left surviving after the rest of the country has been razed to the ground!

Point is, those tactics are at best lazy and at worst criminally negligent. But just what do you expect from a load of soldiers who get their kicks from tossing live puppies to their death for fun and youtube immortality? Nice.

my PS4 spec rant (2007-02-04 02:07)

On my quest to be popular, and more so...getting comments, I created as realistic PS4 speculation w/o knowing anything to amuse anyone who wants to read this....

It's going to be based on the octal-stress technology, the successor of the Dual Stress technology based on PS3 and IBM's most powerful server IBM System p5 595. Seeing that technology will appear in 2 1/2 years in the future. 2 1/2 times 2 = 5 years justifying when PS4 may be released.

Although some people believe the PS4 will have download-only games onto a gigantic HDD like the Phantom console, I believe it will use a Quad-layer Blu-ray media, and a little 80 GB HDD. 512 MB GDDR7 on Geforce 11 is what I believe the vram will be based on . 512 MB XDR2 based on CPU clock speed. The controller will be the SixAxis 2 (/w all Wii remote's tilt and wave features!) The CPU most likely be a Cell at higher clock speed and quadruple the SPEs. SPEs are like cores except no brain..SPEs handle raw data which is controlled by a single PPE. PS4 will be $600 like PS3 at launch.

Playstation 4 supports Unreal Engine 4.0 thru Unreal Engine 4.5, Lithtech Triton, CryENGINE3, and many games will be developed on Unreal Engine 4.0 because that is one way to find a crowd who will spend that kind of cash on it when Gaming is even more mainstream than now.

PS2 emulation will be perfected in PS4, but you can't tell the benefits because the CPU costs a bit more at smaller silicon process.

PS4 will have a large amount of sequels to sequels on PS3 (Madden, DMC 7, Gran Turismo 7, Resident Evil 7, Final Fantasy 15, Wild Arms 8, Winning Eleven 15, NBA 2k?, Major League Baseball 2k?, Metal Gear ???, GTA6, GTA7,)

Only hardcore gamers will play PS4 because it's too high-tech for the mainstream gaming like what makes Wii popular..hopefully a Wii-mote SixAxis hybrid controller will help them.

I don't hate America, but i hate politics (2007-02-04 03:08)

I hate the fact I suck at politics....I know Hiliary Clinton is going to be Ms. President already so there is no point in trying to be a republican. It's all about Bill Clinton cos he is a genius. I am republican, but lately I've been brushing up on my liberal communication skills. I believe I may end up voting in John McCain (Sentator of Arizona) just because he is a republican. The US is at war and the republicans pretty much spend 24 % of the budget on military expenses. The future is full of un-manned aircraft (Boeing X-45, X-47), water bomb detinators seen in James Bond, power armor exelskeleton (like in StarShip Troopers marines) and to keep those funded...you must support republican
I love Brooks and Dunn, Alan Jackson, and Bon Jovi. These are my favorite country artists because their singing is so beautiful. I think that Brooks and Dunn one best duo artists from 1994 - 2002 skipping 2000. And Alan Jackson got several #1s in the US Top 10 in the country genre. All of my favorites are in the mp3 player.
I am going to get out and drive around Hudson so I can buy three games all at once. It looks like i'm getting a new job by next week. Probably at $8/hr. Good news....I may be able to afford Rogue Galaxy (8.5 on IGN, 8.0 on Gamespot)

PS4 specs...that is because if we don't have PS4...it would be interesting like Dreamcast 2 for example (2007-02-04 03:10)

EA is better than Nintendo at last! (2007-02-04 03:13)

Fact is an American publisher is bigger than Nintendo Corp and this is a good thing, because we're the 2nd largest videogame consumer in the world! It's a fair trade off. EA earned $201 million in profit in the first quarter on the worst platform of this year (last to sell 1 million units world-wide = confirmation). I guess I'm all for North American reigning champions in this area.

So I won't buy Madden NFL 07 because I'm waiting for Madden 09 to come out for PS3, because fact is ESPN NFL 2K5 is better than Madden NFL 07 for any console. Gamespot said it well...ESPN Football 2k5 is the best football game they've ever played and the fact it's only $20 is insane". Visual concepts didn't do another one because EA got exclusive NFL license. If Visual Concepts got a license on Arena Football League or NCAA Football, 2k Games could make a load of money because people may be fed up spending $60 on average football sims! I would! My friend bob agrees which is why he bought Madden NFL 2002 and 2003 on PS2 (the gfx weaker then GCN platform /w 4 times the popularity).

So Nintendo is only 2nd best and I like that

Memorization freeware (2007-02-05 12:08)

The first program is called Brain Builder 3.0. It's a little old which is why it's freeware. Download size 29 MB. The 2nd is my favorite, Captains Log (mere 10 MB) in case you need to remember directions or basic math. It's old, runs in MS-DOS from 1999. Found it on an abandonware site. I had some fun with Brain Builder...it told me how much my memory is average.....

Brian Builder 3

Captains Log

Google "KGB compression" and I'm sure you'll find something that'll open it.

AMD K8L and the quitting PC Gaming dellima (not if, when) (2007-02-09 11:31)

At the time of writing this my 3 yr old Dell Dimension XPS (Pentium 4, 2 GB) , it takes 2 seconds to open Word and 2 seconds to open weird Opera 9 . It takes longer to open Firefox cos the internet has this negative effect on Firefox seek time.

Anyhow, I got a Systemax Hellcat so when firefox loads in 1 seconds due to unaffected by Internet or more specifically anything coming thru TCP/80! 1 core is shut off because it's running in 32-bit mode! That 32-bit mode is still making my new PC beat my Dell Dimension XPS by 30 fps in any game.

Athlon 64 x4 (or formally known as AMD K8L) comes out next year and it possesses 2 MB of L2 cache + free 2MB L3 cache (L3 doesn't exist on Athlon 64 X2) with Hyper transport 3.0. Won't improve my gaming because I have the most advanced GPU out on the market...the Geforce 8800 GTX and it runs 100 % at high resolutions above 50 fps (60 fps is considered the most my retina can process). And it's for my eyes only which I can sort of share /in form of jpegs.

So there is Crysis, Halo 2, and UT2007 which may bog down my graphics to 40 fps at max settings using my Geforce 8800 GTX. Problem with that is I don't have very much money available so a.) can't afford any more pc games. B.) I'm buying a Wii in the future C.) Online PC gaming is starting to die except for all the Blizzard games. This means no one will buy Geforce 11 series cards. Actually, I fibbed just now. It sounds smart saying nobody is going to buy Geforce 11 PCIe cards when actually I'll somehow have the guts for one come 2011. That's probably going to be the truth, but I don't see how I would be interested in Unreal Engine 4.5-based first person shooters other than the whole ownership deal. That bugs me. At present I predict that I much rather spend my money on some Xbox 360 game five years down the road.

So today I played Guild Wars Prophecies for only 4 hours today before getting really tired of it. I am still a part of the Guild Wars People (most of them are in pre-apocalypse episode) and I think I'll find a new guild to be a part of because the current one is dual. What easier time to get occupied than to play UT2004. They say first person shooters increase your response time in homework.

PAQ7 vs. ZIP (2007-02-10 09:45)

(PAQ8 was mentioned in the forums page to be included in KGB archiver 2.0, but the beta version has PAQ7)

Fact known in life, everybody uses zip a lot! Zip can be decoded by every OS quite easily and fast. Zip rules sourceforge.org source archives and executables (although Rar archives have been seen there).

Fast forward 7 years into the super processors of tomorrow (quadcore K8L and Core 2 Duo Extreme) which can make 35 % better compression ni amazingly high compression ratios that PAQ7 will give you. Zip still wins for any archive. For a 35 MB file it will take a good 40 minutes on a Pentium 4 with 2 GB of RAM (and it's running in background on taskbar) and Zip will do this in under 50 seconds with 35 % worst compression. So download and extraction of the zip file would take less no matter what broadband you have then the time saved by downloading a much smaller KGB file!

Now if you want to cram 35 % more information on a CD using KGB is a good idea. I would do it. In fact I put all my files in 7zip now-a-days, but that is just me. Everybody who makes a open source program wants to put it in zip /w bzip2 compression container!

Point is doesn't anyone feel zip is dated and want to use PAQ7 in KGB Archiver 2.0 (comes out February 14)?

Resistance Fall of Man & Ridge Racer 7 personal reveiw (2007-02-26 22:07)

First off I know if you misspell worlds your automatically more popular for some reason, but Firefox is the only web browser i can log in with and it has a internal spell check so I plan to use it despite what some popular anonymous guy thinks of elite talk or something...i don't do the so called elite talk here so just deal with it.

First off no dental bills on President's Day due to no cavities despite my above average Mt. Dew intake! I brush my teeth once a day, don't use mouth wash or flase.

I haven't blogged on IGN party because everything seems to be all said for. I can't review a damn game well yet I make 'exceptional resumes.' according to my job seeker program. Ok, I'll try. It's really hard because I'll playderise someone else if I don't....that's real easy to do cos i got it loaded in another tab, but I won't.

Expect it to be less then perfect, but here is a one for my expensive taste.

Resistance Fall of Man short review

I know that Resistance is the only good first person shooter for PS3 and it's the #1 game. PS3 is like a Xbox with hype centered around a pretty first person shooter. This time it isn't a 733 MHz Intel Pentium III powering it....it's a 7 SPE Cell Broadband Engine (more powerful than Core 2 Duo Extreme) PS3 can be seen as the Sega Saturn of the HD era. (with everybody hates programming for it).

The game looks a lot like Battlefield 2 Modern Combat for PC, but it runs at lower fps (30 fps) because the game engine has texture limitations and no hard drive to cache from. The graphics look a lot like Call of Duty 2 for Xbox 360 which was the top selling game before Gears of War...it's not running the Unreal Engine 3.0 which is the best layout engine in the entire game industry. It looks really run down and worse then the Nazi air-raid on London because the game takes place in UK in 1951. And somehow with the creativity of making the Resistance 50 years more advanced /w the V22 Osprey Web as a clear indicator because Humans aren't in the dark even in 1951.

The music is really well designed like in Call of Duty 2/3. I like it okay. Insomniac did a good job on their Ratchet and Clank music and it seems to get a 9.0 at IGN because it's better then most games....that sort of is emulated with Resistance to a certain degree.

Replay value is unrated because I haven't had the time or the need to finish it, but it gets a 9.0 just because it's the best PS3 game out there at the moment.

Ridge Racer 7

Honestly, it got a 8.0 at IGN by directly taking tracks from Ridge Racer 6 that got a 8.5 out of 10 as a launch title and most british-based message boards (Catharton Electronica) also say that because PS3 is in 3rd place so anything using material from a X360 game is automatically bad. So what it has the same tracks as Ridge Racer 6! The graphics match Project Gotham Racing 3 because PGR3 gfx were brilliant for what was seen on X360 in 2005 according to 1up. The graphics are very realistic (as far as whats possible in a video game.) The reflexions on the tracks are really great and look better then what's possible racing games on PS2.

Sound is very trance-like. It's okay and yes, I actually turned it up so my parents hear it. I can seriously get away with this odd music in a video game. Talking about clever. erm, mp3s on hdd anyone? Unfortunately, there isn't a way to read mp3s off hdd in this game like what's possible in 100 % of 360 games..disadvantage, but O-well. I still rate this game a 8.0 in sound because I also believe the trance on it is done by a professional and not some amateur DJ.

I give it a 8.4 out of 10 for being fun, but it doesn't seem right for a 9.0 because Resistance has that and Virtua Fighter 5 may even beat a 9.0 tomorrow so a 8.4 just sounds right.

Probably going to Rasmussen College in April (2007-02-27 02:32)

Last weekend, I formatted my dad's hard drive (so it ran faster) and got paid $60 so I can spend it on videogames...possibly F1 Championship Edition for the PS3! High Def high stakes racing....Michael Schumacher became a billionaire off his winning streak. America of course is into NASCAR instead of F1 because we have sports unlike anyone else in the world as "national pastime" unless the other countries got it from us (AKA NFL Europa)

Today I went to Rasmussen College (in Woodbury) and Dean of Students + Head of Networking sat me down with my parents and explained if the courses. The class rooms are suppose to look big and scary and I was suppose to be a nervous wreck, but that's normal, and I hate getting normal, because getting nervous is stupid and I hate being mainstream. I'm going to enroll here in April, but they only cover A+ instead of CCNA certificate and it's six times as expensive as WITC. That's the problem...I wanted to get my money's worth getting respectable certificate, and this school is really ungodly expensive for what you get, but see I'm not paying for it so that's not the problem. The problem is they won't help me get a CCNA (the lowest certificate in the Cisco certification) That's wimpy compared to CCNP. I said that to the dean, and almost walked out, but then thinking for some reason that wouldn't be wise (because I'm going there for almost free). The dean (although smarter) and that embarrassing grin on her face knowing I was right. So point is I'm still going to have to fight thru my personal learning problems and get CCNA with a bad job (at least I live with my parents)

Over at Century and WITC, it's suppose to be chaos with students all wanting their share of attention, but I need a little more then them.

Oh yeah, Virtua Fighter 5 game play is really so much better then Virtua Fighter 4 it truly is one of the top 2 PS3 games out on shelves presently. I had so much fun yesterday playing it!

Old School Flash Back: Sega Saturn (2007-03-03 17:30)

I'm am really confused what the best Saturn game is, but I know if it's not radiant Silvergun, that I own it! Whether its' Panzer Dragoon Saga or Fighter Megamix or Virtua Fighter 2 (best selling game) or

You see, Randy is coming over tomorrow so there is nothing to post other then I'm getting Tekken 5 Dark Resurrection for PS3 because it's only $20 I originally was going to spend $40 on God of War 2, but I'll withdrawal $25 to pay for God of War 2 later this month.

I would buy an iPod, but sense I'm really clever and found out that LAME 3.97 MPEG2.5 sounds almost exactly like a HE-AAC at 64 kbps doubles the space in each of my aging mp3 players. (just listen to my blog mp3 player) And I barely go outta my room so whats' the point on wasting money something that plays HE-AAC and is smaller, and uses a bit less battery?

PS3forums quotes pt 2 (2007-03-08 17:31)

Then MS would announce an HD-DVD drive "built in" to neutralize the PS3. Then they denied that this was ever in the plans.

I remember when that former President of Sega of America Peter something said that. But MS wants Xbox 360 to be less expensive so it can continue to dominate Wii. Ps3 just sold 1 million units last month. Not that I care because I got two PS3s and a Xbox 360.

Then Blu-ray's were "vulnerable" to scratches, much moreso than HD-DVD, and they were inherently flawed for rental companies. But then people on here began to realise that it is HD-DVD that is much more vulnerable to scratches and Blu-ray discs were MUCH more reliable.

I think HD-DVD and Bluray are the same ebcause both have cases, if you take care of it...should last long enough until HVD comes out and replaces BD and HDDVD as mainstream HD format in 2010 or 2011.

These arguments all turned out to be wrong. But at least they were somewhat interesting because we were all waiting with baited breath to see how the PS3 would effect sales and what would happen at CES.

Wait. I'm sure everybody read IGN and Gamespot.com reviews and realised that maybe X360 had more 9.0s then PS3 with Resistance FOM being only one until Virtua Fighter 5 in 20 days. Then people look at the screenshots and make their decisions based on what evidence of screenshots they have. Doubt many people hear of CES!

WTF?!? I didn't understand a word you just said. Maybe I missed something because I didn't read the last page.

You are making no sense whatsoever

Really? I really was trying to make sense. So I took the idea of developers claiming 1080p hardware scaling didn't exist and it does so maybe it was a misconception on the programmers part. My writing may be a HS level /w bad english? Americans get taught worse in writing English than Europeans.

Saying a game is 720P by design is meaningless. A game can be rendered to many output resolutions. I can run my PC games at 1280x720, 1600x1200 or 1920x1080 (all 16:9). Which resolution is it "designed" for? All, the game assets like textures are independent from output resolution. Like I said before I can run Quake 2 at 1920x1080 and FEAR at 640x480, of course newer games "match" HD resolutions better for obvious reasons.

Yeah what he said. I think everybody that has PC game would understand thou. PS3 is the exception because it costs like entry level new PC unlike any other console that is standard def CRT TV ready which explains why nothing was above 640x480 for two generations (Jaguar 3DO, PS, N64, Saturn, Dreamcast) and every consoles downsample to 480p. I only had a HDTV for two and my ps1 is a launch console too and is still as strong as the day i got it

I find that hard to believe, but it's possible. Everybody with a PS1 (not PSone) said it had terrible lifespan. You had to turn it vertically or upside down, because something wore away the laser diode.

i was a bit slow hitting save so that's why this reply may look strange

I have one PS2 that is 76 % done with lifecycle and a brand new PStwo with 0 % done with it's lifecycle. If I allow PS2 game runs on PS3 it will ware out my PS3 faster and i have no warrentee.

Capo Digi has a sig with King Arthur looking for the holy grail, Jesus's daughter and it's in London according to the Di Vinci Code. Now, I am seriously wondering if Graham Chapman already knew this when doing his part as King Arthur in Monty Python's Holy Grail. Movie was seriously funny. Graham was a genius so of course he purposely did a movie on it 30 years before the Di Vinci Code.

Half-life 2 Orange Coming this summer to PS3

Downloading torrents sucks thru my connection so I am buying HL2 Black for PC only even though it sounds too good to be true on PS3, yet it's coming out at $60! I don't want to have my Geforce 8 series wasted. I haven't played a game on it in over 40 days because of these forums are so addicting! With the Neverwinter Nights 2 torrent at Torrentspy I only averaged at 7 Kb/s with 17 Kb/s tops. It's a wonder how I managed to get Panzer Dragoon saga, Dragon Force, Guardian Heroes, and Magic Knight Rayearth over my Kaband connection.

Is Blu-ray the best medium for GAMES?

Okay, Ars-Technicia doesn't mention that all games cache off the hard drive so for example Square-Enix could save data to hard drive while the area of Final Fantasy is loaded into memory so the next area will load really fast. What is a 10 second loading screen in RRVII to you? How about we accept it doesn't load levels instantly like a N64 would. Who is going to buy Xbox 360 over PS3 because of a few seconds difference in loading screens. A lot more people bought Neo Geo CD more then Neo Geo AVS and the loading times of Neo Geo CD sucked /w 1x CD-ROM!

IGN's Most Anticipated Playstation games of 07

I like Half-life 2 Orange Box the best despite getting ep2 for PC... God of War 2 is a ps2 game. Did you mean it's multi platform?

Here is my list (okay so it's a little science fiction) one else's.

No really! You're not obligated too. Doing it myself anyway like everyone else okay. No body got their feelings hurt. his is some indication that the attach rate for HD-DVD is much better Easily because the only dual layer BD is "Click" and DL-HD-DVD has an advantage of 5 GB more space while cheaper to buy. I don't know if "DVD" in HD-DVD logo is giving HD-DVD an unfair advantage or not. Can someone clear that up for me? It's true, most of my friends are obsessive over the obsolete DVD format.

The real question is, how many potential BluRay consumers were holding off for the cheaper and higher quality (HDMI 1.3) PS3 to come out to watch their movies on?

What scares me is my parents and one of my friend is excited for the generation after Bluray because they have a HDTV, but my friend deals with the pixelation of MPEG2 on DVD. The reduced cost makes it well worth it. This friend of mine is still getting his first DL-DVDRW. He'll still be supporting DVDR when HVDs came out officially.

Are you kidding? I still have my Sega CD Lunar, and my Ghaleon punching puppet. They're not getting rid of me that easily.

I just don't get it. Lunar 1 & 2 were the best selling Sega CD games yet all the original fanfare came from the Saturn version (US Saturn release canceled due to 1998 death) so US Playstation owners got it. Always wondered why Saturn MPEG was superior to PS1s FMV. MPEG is MPEG – hardware shouldn't matter! Still one of the highlights of the PS version was MPEG quality was up to Final Fantasy VIII standards.

Of course it plays obsolete...I played The Silver Star Story and I say it played obsolete for PS RPG.

Meh, all my games were burned.

Tough luck.

CarpetShark

I sure don't know if Sony is going to win, but I am absolutely right when I know CarpetShark's avatar is Mao from Shadow Hearts - From the New World....I am just that good! I'm a sony fan, and I'm a power-purchaser for somebody not rich. Videogames are dumb, but then they aren't dumb at the same time. It confuses me. I mean people aren't dumb on this forum yet they talk about these "worthless videogames that loose value fast /w no increase in value". I dunno. Maybe I'm a paranoid basement guy.

So enlighten me, what's the point of collecting?

(A) The price will only hinder sales a little bit until a price drop, which isn't too far off in the future.

The PS3 is obviously an awesome console and is recognized by consumers as such.

I know it's scary thought when PS3 keeps lowering in price, the less special you are (and the more mainstream it is). Spooky!

I thought it was called the white engine? or was that other Square Enix games?

I didn't look at wikipedia for the info.

Then, Square doesn't even sell their technologies, when it becomes obsolete, they simply scrap it and make a new one... jerks... lol

That's how they keep all the money inside the company (why save money when your 2nd largest publisher in Japan).

No matter how much money Square spends on flagship titles...they always get 150 % back

"PS3 as a Bluray Player"

<http://www.guidetohometheater.com/hd...rs/1206ps3blu/>

do yourself a favor and read the entire article but for the lazy.. there are some standouts below:

That's nice, but I watched Talladega Nights which sucked movie wise and I got all the other Blu-ray on DVD which is a waste of money to upgrade to High Def. Also, my parents aren't ready for HD yet. They went from VHS (1970s tech) straight to DVD. No S-VHS, no HiFi-VHS, no Data-VHS in between that, and we still have a composite tv (people like us use their TVs for at least 5 years!).

And no it's not NASCAR that's the problem. It's the fact they didn't put Rudy (Sean Austin) in it instead. Why put a movie based on America's 2nd most spectator sport?

What the heck! What the * is wrong with Rudy? It doesn't matter to you British anyways. You hate both American Football and NASCAR. What's your problem?

think it's entirely possible that Blu-ray has won and we just don't know it yet

Blu-ray may be winning, but since my Circuit City is the top store in all the midwest and it says HD-DVD is doing better now in this part of the country, it'd be unwise to not take their word for it. They have as much credibility as any electronic store in Woodbury, MN.

Will there be a Lite-on HVD player peripheral for PS3 by 2010 to move PS3 to the next level of High Def when the time comes? It's not impossible right?

It's probably not too hard to do 1tb of data on a movie.

It's not 1 TB, it's 300 GB right now. When Optware said 3.9 TB, they don't mean mass-production nor available at Best Buy, they meant experimental prototypes

The standards body Ecma International is leading the standard setting group for HVD, and expects to submit a proposed standard (probably at 300 GB capacity) to the International Organization for Standardization for ISO approval, around December 2006

HVD Player addon

Will there be a Lite-on HVD player peripheral for PS3 by 2010 to move PS3 to the next level of High Def when the time comes? It's not impossible right?

Erm...ok. And the ps4 will use a cold fusion power source and have a quantum computing processor.[quote]

No, Quantum computers will be fully functional when Moore's Law ends in 2018-2020 so Playstation 6 will have a early Quantum CPU in 2018 - maybe if we're that lucky.

[quote]I highly doubt that HVD will have it's primary use for video unless it does uncompressed 1440p or 1080p.

It'll be for various 1080p TV-series. Season 10 of The Simpsons or Season 9 of ST Voyager, because you're right it wouldn't make sense for a 2 1/2 hour movie to be on it.

What are you playing the MOST on your PS3?

Haven't opened Resistance yet. So it's the best game for PS3, I am really trying to get above 9th place in RR7. The art of drifting I had experienced with the xbox version of Colien McRae Rally 04 or Rallisport Challenge. The fact I suck at it won't matter. I have barely any friends, everybody will be playing something else in 2 months, and it's offline due to my *ty satellite internet uplink.

I am thinking about playing a PSX RPG....one of the Final Fantasy games or Xenogears.

Why would we need a ps4 when the ps3 is future proof?

IF the PS3 was "future proof" it would've had a G80-based RSX and a better shader model, but that proved unnecessary and expensive. A DirectX 10-like PS3 would be fun.

I sorry to bring this here but I see at gamefaq.com that alot of people think Square Enix is being racist because they have no other race but white people in them. I know from past games that this can be true

Haven't you seen black women in FF XII? How about the black people in Star Ocean 3 Till the End of Time? And the fact, there are no caucasians in Japanese RPGs. They're all Asian anyways except for FF12 which is trying to look British on purpose for change. I mean the 2nd largest market for videogames is the United States, and we're definately not made up of Asians so it would make sense to have a Final Fantasy for the Western world complete with black people.

Sony confirms PS4

Sony shouldn't of made it public. Sony is working up PS4 hardware alliances to keep the other 1st parties in check (besides Nintendo who is making profit...I know Wii 2/360 is certain realistic)

Working with Sony Toshiba IBM alliance and Nvidia G100-based GPU would be my guess.

is NOT backwards compatible and they'll abandon BD for Sony Yellow-Ray technology,

If you think "BD2" is like HVD than greenish-blue laser diode man. If it was BD Alliance's Yello-Ray than HVD alliance would say yellow laser diode instead of greenish-blue diode (HVD same generation as "yello-ray"). Got it?

It really should been GBD instead of YD, don't you think?

Vote your favorite Audio Compression

MP3

AAC (HE-AAC)

WMA

Vorbis

I pick AAC because

- 1.) Rather than VBR that Vorbis has....AAC is smaller filesize with flat bitrate
- 2.) MPEG4 part 3 is the successor to MPEG2 part 3
- 3.) I'm a end user who doesn't care about liscenses manufactures have to pay to legally obtain a decoder.
- 4.) WMA doesn't play in Linux.
- 5.) Nero AAC encoder 4.9.x won the July 2006 48 kbps test at Hydrogenfo

Buyin experiance at Circuit City

Circuit City is the worst place to get the PS3 for me because I'm an employee and employee gets last bids. While I'm working, I can't buy anything during my shift so when it's over the PS3 is not there (so I would say Game Stop in Inver Grove Heights is my favorite next to Shop Ko.) These places for some reason carried it at the right time I called in.

Hmm...I think you need to grow up my friend. I did look at the package, and I can read what it says, and if you would have taken time before you rushed to click "Add to cart" you would have realized whats going on.

I would buy off internet except ebay is too expensive and those online stores haven't carried any at the time I bought it late November, early December.

Red Steel

Ubisoft Paris stinks on Red Steel. They're putting all their avaiable resources in Splinter Cell Double Agent and GRAW. GRAW 360 got a 9.5 on IGN. For those who forgot, Paris was capital of the last socialist state in Europe which is why Americans boycott french fries, french red wine, french cigars, french dressing, french tea, and Jean Reno movies.

I have as of 12/19/06

Talledaga Nights Ballet of Ricky Bobby

Terminator 2

The Great Raid

What I hate about this generation of gamers.....

If you want a extremely pro Nintendo site: Check this site. I literally come here so i may be sane about people likign what i like; not some SNES rom you play with the wiimote and think it's the best thing ever! Okay so I'm exaggerating a little, but 1.) PS3 can be just as fun 2.) we're getting GT5, MGS4 and FFXIII. 3.) Nintendo fans hate talking about PC specs.

So when you say Novell you mean OSS as a whole

I don't know. How can you attack tarballs with source code on 1000s of servers? That's impossible. You can attack distrobutions because people pay Novell for retail boxes at CompUSA and Best Buy. Suse 10.1 is next to the Windows XP Pro boxes at the above places. Of course Microsoft would pick on Suse which happens to be owned by Novell. Suse Linux is 2nd to Ubuntu Linux in popularity and has some of the most state-of-the-art OSS software packages aimed for causal desktop user.

They want Suse out of the picture eventually for MS's survival.

PS3's launch isn't all that great

Well the $500 peice of sh!t as worth it! sarcasium Whos backing me up?

Well, encouraging may not be enough. And promises for better looking games in the future don't really cut it. The PS3 is here now, it costs an extra $200 (at minimum), and the visual difference is questionable

D@mn it! It's not Sony's fault DirectX 9 is a property of Microsoft! They are stuck with Open GL 2.0 hardware accel-eration. Developers have a hay day developing for PC (no SDK charges because the PC is a SDK in itself). MS has the advantage!

M $ does own G4, why do you think their big PS3 launch special blew?

Xbox 360 is preferred in the majority of American gamer percentage? That's fact. The truth makes you not a nice person doesn't it?

k...I told my friends that I want to upgrade my PS3 to a 200GB harddrive. They said why do u need so much space, it's just a console. What should I tell them?

Tell them that the 1 terabyte SATA drives are out and go upgrade....it's the thrend and nerdy thing to do. Then after he says really? Tell him he's a bloke because "idoits want to upgrade for no reason so they can never fill it up, but say they have it" just wait, and you will get all that u want. also the problem is that alot of studios are producing for both microsoft and sony now -> because XBOX did a great job with the market and which in return means MORE MONEY / more people Game Industry doesn't interest me as much as the stuff on shelves (or my shelf for that matter) I know no matter what you say...that JRPG is $60 for either 360 or PS3 and what for? Price gouging. Game industry can get away with the price if Americans pay it and no doubt there are 2/3 as many as two generations ago in the USA. Anywho, I don't see any out and I'm mad.

Last generation (6th gen 2001 - 2006) there has been a decrease in PC gamer except for the Blizzard games which break records. The best selling PC game is still The Sims 2 from 2004. (though Diablo 2 is best selling MMORPG and RPG)

Playstation 2 is the only console that outdone the Playstation. Gamecube did poorer in sales than N64 and Dreamcast better than Saturn (because it was high res 3D instead of 2D powerhouse like Saturn) while nobody bought DC because of the SEGA nameplate (word means sucky to most gamers). With Sega out...MS brings Halo / PGR3 / Forza / some PC developers / DirectX 8 to console industry.

White Knight Story (working title) by Level 5 in Japan looks very promising and will hopefully be out late 2007

I want Dragon Quest 9 from Level 5!

Official PAL PS3 Launch Countdown Until March 23rd! - 47 Days

I don't see an awesome JRPG in there

PS3 is suppose to be a JRPG goldmine like PS2 was. The fact I haven't seen any besides FFXIII and that is popular because the 3rd largest developer on Earth makes it. (EA does Madden, NASCAR, NBA, NHL, MLB, and Need for Speed | Nintendo does Mario, Zelda, Pokemon | Square-Enix develops for you guessed it PS3)

Sony vs. Legend of Zelda nother stupid article. It should be Wii vs. PS3, but he's doing Zelda to get page hits because TTP is the best selling Wii game. I dunno the point?

"Alien" First Person shooter

I want Alien vs. Star Trek Elite Force (a parody of Alien vs. Predator for PC/Jaguar) Alien board Enterprise E (of the Star Trek TNG) and the ship's force field fail and "Alien" breaches 2/3s of the Enterprise E

I can't wait to be Sigourney Weaver behind a machine gun!!! And I want Tom Skerritt to voice Dallas. And lets have HAL look a lot better this time(updated to 2006 standards).

PS3forums quotes pt 1 (2007-03-09 17:32)

How can 36 and Wii compete with Home

It's hardly initiative. Sony was looking at the best selling PC game ever, The Sims 2, and copied it exactly with VoIP and mp3 streaming additions. But people don't care....Sony fans will love it because The Sims 2 technically is the best selling pc game ever.

've been trying to think of how the other consoles can compete with PSHome. for example, is making xbox live "free" enough? It seems like ps3 has gotten an advantage in the online network. Everytime i think of how 360 or wii can compete with Home, i can only think of them making their own "home". Like seriously, what else could they do?

I disagree. PS3 is in 3rd place. Xbox 360 and Wii are in 2nd place. How exactly can't they compete? Their superiority will still be above PS3 w/o HOME. HOME is irrelevant, really. HOME is just a large file you'll download for free. Some people will do it, but most people won't.

Is Motorstorm Worth it?

I haven't bought a PSP game in 4 months and missed out on Ratchet & Clank Size Matters and Daxter until 2pm today for $55 with Gamestop discounts. And I have to save my money up for Atelier Iris 3 Grand Fantasm next month (best Gust-developed RPG yet, 8.0 out of 10) in April. Also coming out in April is Riviera The Promised Land. I'd wait until it's $29 3 months from now.

NEW Ratchet and Clank info + Screens (PS3 game) know this looks awesome and there are a lot of 20-something year olds into videogames, but I don't know how i'm going to pay for these advanced software. Or hardware when it breaks. I guess I rather talk about it then keep buying $50 - $60 next gen games all the time. That's what most of people on this forum do, right?

I'm ignoring my gaming rig on the other side of my room! Expensive piece of crap! It's hard to know what platform to play on when you own everything at the moment. I might have an anime RPG addiction which may explain why I'm into consoles.

I like to see that even though it is difficult now to develop for the ps3 companys are not shying away from it. Cell style technology is going to be a standard design pretty soon so not learning it is only going to ruin a company. Also with the upcoming GDC I hope to see even more companys willing to tackle development on the ps3 (talk of releasing dev tools at GDC).

http://www.s-times.net/03052007/04/id_software_hypes_nintendo_wii_ps3_and_xbox_360

Yeah, the game industry is like a 100 billion dollar industry, but the fanbase is shrinking even though it's much bigger than it was in 1990s. It really would be death for a developer if he didn't learn the hardware and multiports seem to lessen financial damage if the publisher can do PS3, 360, Wii, maybe PSP as well. In this regard, EA and Activision and Namco-Bandai have no worries cos they're the biggest. Square-Enix can survive on PS2, PSP, and NDS because of their fanbase is so large unlike a lot of other developers. I have like most of their games too on PS, PS2

The Inquirer on Console Shortages

I like IGN or Gamespot, depending on the section...the editors are bashing other sections. I've been to the inquirer to prove my point on a few occasions at wikipedia (ie keep those wikipedians from flaming at me for giving the real Wii specs. They called me uncreditable)

Motorstorm thread

My life is fricken terrible. I have a friend over once every 4 months. I can't make friends. The Gamestp[people are calling Sony fanboys stupid and crazy for knowing the Wii specs. I could be wasting my time in front of the TV, but I've been doing that since 8. What sets me a part from the normal gamer is the fact I think games are stupid (on the road....i hang around non-gamers) because no body cares about my opinion and I have 120 PS2 games, 42 PS games, 42 DC games, 23 N64 games, 18 Saturn games, 69 Xbox games, 16 Xbox 360 games, 50+ PC games and no body games with me so I'm forced to! And I don't even have my CCNA degree!

Life is so damn uninteresting that I've thought about suicide, but the fact I'm anthiest and think once you died....you dont' go to heaven...point is i dread death so I hate living at home and *ing doing nothing.

Drunk with Surly Darkness* Yet another $60 down the piper hick paying for Motorstorm and everybody favors the popular guy" Hick .

F1CE Review

Nobody goes to Gamerankings.com for reasons i don't know. We got a 40 %, 50 %, 48 %, and IGN's 72 % Greatest Console Ever Made?

Why the heck is 16-bit SNES is the 2nd favorite conosle of all time...

What was on it? Legend of Zelda Link to the Past or Chrono Trigger? Those games are really outdated. I see how ppl voted N64 with Perfect Dark, Goldeneye and Legend of Zelda OoT, Banjo Kazooie and SM64 though because that was a time where polygons existed! PS must've tied because of the Final Fantasy, Gran Turismo, and MGS...maybe Chrono Cross.

Anyone purchase VF5 yet?

I owned it since yesterday. It's great. The fighters are so much like supermodels....before you know it...Sega is putting out "Virtua Fighter Beach Volleyball" All the men are going to be in boxers and all the women are going to be in bikini. Except unlike DOAX2, Virtua Fighter Beach Volleyball is going to have multiple jetski courses!

Is this game even out in Canada yet?

Give a Wal-Mart in Detroit your Canadian dollars....I'm sure they'll take $50 and $10 bills.

All I'm saying is N64 and PS make more sense as 2nd place behind PS2 because it emulated SNES, backwards compatible with PSone.

my local game store has had the same lineup on the shelf for 3 weeks now with the exception of a couple of new titles added

But how many titles do you plan to own? 14 - 20?

PS3 Fans, Why Did you not buy a 360?

The reason why I didn't buy a 2nd Xbox 360 is because PS3 is more powerful so I bought two (one was freebee), I bought a Geforce 8800 GTX for $630, and I thought I couldn't go wrong with PS3 because it has two best selling consoles of all time inside it. I figured out that a 64 kbps LAME 3.97 b2 mp3 file sounds a lot like a AAC file at the same bitrate and it doesn't corrupt on the hdd so i'm even more happy then i was a month ago.

And I'll tell you the facts: Xenon can't execute x86 instructions natively, it has to use emulation. And what does any of this have to do with licensing? Microsoft doesn't have to pay nVidia anything. Why the hell would they? And since both consoles use the Direct3D API, the most that would be needed is a compatability layer for some GeForce specific things.

Sorry man I'm right for once...please don't get mad. CTRL F emulate and you'll find the word is non-existent.

A 333 MHz RISC CPU can certainly emulate a 33 MHz RISC (with only 2 MB of VRAM and a MB of RAM) at half the PS's resolution. That's like so simple for it.

3GB of ram is not needed to emulate

Damn it! I *ing know this! It's just that I so happen to have 3 GB inside it for no *ing reason...I'm going to *ing lie and say I only have 512 MB in my PC so you can laugh at me and say that isn't enough ram.

A Opteron 165 2.8GHz dual core mode is only 56 fps in the most complex Final Fantasy 10 (2001 era) and this is emulating 1 294 MHz 128-bit RISC and two 160 MHz 128-bit RISC. It's not even doing God of War 2. The Xenon is 3 cores at 3.2 GHz sharing 1 MB L2 cache and you believe that it can emulate a 733 MHz Pentium 3? Xbox 360 even has in order processing like current x86 CPUs (before the AMD K8L, the first out of order x86 CPU since Pentium III)

Even Grandia III is getting 44.3 Frames per second on the Dual Core AMD Opteron 165 2.8GHz

The Xenon would have to be reading the game code w/o emulating the Pentium 3 otherwise you would see below normal fps on all games. It is true Xbox 360 runs Xbox games at full frames per second so it can't be possibly emulating it like you say it is. And it is the first PPC architecture running Windows NT kernel which itself is compatible with the Xbox WinNT kernel which fools the Xbox game code into thinking Xenon is compatible architecture. It doesn't give error messages or anything does it?

Plus this site says the Xenon CPU shares similarities with Pentium 4

Stupid idea.

Even if Sony were to remove Emotion Engine, the Emotion engine, SPE, MIPS, Vector Units are in my current one. PSX2 is running Final Fantasy X at 15 fps and I thought my Athlon 64 X2 4800 ...point is I don't believe PS3 can software emulate PS2 with those specs. The only reason why Xbox 360 could emulate Xbox is Xenon could read source code the Pentium 3 uses because it's designed specifically to do so.

Athlon 64 X2 4800

512 MB of RAM at 400 MHz

Geforce 7800 GTX

Cell isn't a Xenon so how could you make it read PS2 game code?

Sony has the resources with IBM to make the chip exceptionally small and inexpensive...heck the CPU has compatible with assembly code written for games...it can be different clock speeds or differnt architecture (like the IBM Xenon acting as an emulator for the Pentium III). The FC Twin isn't using Nintendo hardware specs and it is compatible with SNES and NES games.

I realize that the Emotion Engine is off when PS3 games use the PS3 hardware. In a future firmware update, developers can use the Emotion Engine to their advantage getting some extra CPU load off Cell Broadband Engine for AI and LPCM processing.

It's possible to use the Emotion Engine in PS3 games right?

Virtua Fighter 5 boosts PS3 sales

It's cooler then John Lennon for the remainder of this month. Then another superior game will come out that eclipses VF5 in game play, graphics, sound, and replay value such as Final Fantasy 13! So until then, you have to play some really boring less-than-perfect fighting game. PS3 is getting so bored playing something not 9.5 out of 10 like MGS4 huh?

It's pretty good.....not perfect, but pretty good. And I can buy it tomorrow (16 hrs 15 minutes and counting)

PS3 is #2 in AOL's "Gadgets you shouldn't buy"

Stare at your cable/satellite box when one asks why BD is doing badly. Kick it if you want too, but since nobody is that stupid here...you'll just have to live with satellite which has more variety/is cheaper/more delightful than worth buying on BD at the moment. Satellite subscribers pretty much own DVD collectors' soul too.

It's definitely not an old school game collection....

And those people who think the future is downloading MPEG4 onto HDDs as TV...Tivo converts MPEG2.5 satellite streams into MPEG4 (maybe H264) for HDD storage and it's in real time too!

Funny how this quickly turned into an AOL bashing thread Haha

Well yeah, I got those annoying 30 day free of AOL 5/6/7/8/9/10 trials in the mail to screw me over with long distance call charges and hidden back out fees! Must be a member for at least 1 year or pay $100. Plus, the biggest problem is 56k only! If you got a router and cable inside your home....your cable ISP is probably not AOL

I used to have AOL, but they falsely charged me for a month's fee that I never used with my PC. It was one of those promotional packages that came with my PC. We just need patience because good games haven't shown up yet (Virtua Fighter 5 coming tomorrow). The EU PS3 launch will show us some good games. I just hope the 360 and Wii people accuse us of having ports that are available for their systems. Motorstorm will show us the PS3's capabilities.

Sorry to be a angry humbug or anything, but it's true AOL is the worst ISP ever! They don't even program Netscape. Mozilla Foundation does. AOL takes money from Netscape the ISP service. They can say anything they want and be in denial. The real truth of Bluray's slow sales is HD and standard def satellite channels. All that money is going towards paying for DirecTV HD package or the foreign equivalent of DirecTV HD programming!

There is nothing wrong with Bluray technically. Bluray has all the backing of every major corporation except Universal Studios (keep in mind that Universal was the last publisher of Data VHS which says a lot) Has anyone other than me saw a real life DVHS tape?

There is none that I know of you all need modded machines,

Action Replay Max Evo Edition & SNESSTATION /w USB tweak. ARMEE comes with PGEM and PC software to burn SMDs on it.

F1CE gets a 90/100!!!

Who gave their Valentine a Vermont Teddy Bear?

This exceptionally well made bear is made in Vermont by the Vermont Teddy Bear Company and it's cute too. Everybody likes teddy bears.

I actually thought of this while searching google for valentine day gifts.

Let me point out what you said here, "immense computer power that is available in the CPU." For the heck of it, let's all just admit that the PC itself nowadays is immensely powerful. Here's the thing though, a while ago, someone made a thread about the new Dell C2H computer and within that thread I did advise nobody to purchase it. But do you know why Dell built that computer? Mainly because we've seen most of the limits that we can do right now with the PC. All we can really do is up the processor (make more cores),

Hey man, are you telling us that buying a AMD K8L quadcore CPU isn't worth the money when the reviews give it a 9.0? I mean if you own a AMD Athlon 64 X2 4800 with 1 MB L2 cache is still relatively powerful I should wait until a later model of AMD K8L (late 2008) is out that has higher MHz and $300 less expensive than the launch model. quadcore at 2.6 GHz (starting at) out of order operations (like Xbox and IBM PPC900 CPUs)

2 MB L2 cache

2 MB L3 cache (free bonus) 4x power

L1 cache sort of slow: dual 128-bit bus

Core 2 Duo Extreme

quadcore at 3.0 GHz

in order operations

L1 cache: 128-bit bus

2 MB of L2 cache only half as much and bad bad bad

NO L3 cache What's L3 cache? We have teh bling bling logo!

Shiny and trusted "Intel logo" It sells processors by itself

Athlon X2 4800

1 MB L2 cache

64KB L1 cache

in-order operations (like Xbox 360)

To you, browsing some forums and arguing with some noobs is more fun than playing some great games?

Course. People don't care what I play...they care what i know.

First off, if it's allready bin posted don't blame me. I used search and nothing came up.

It may be Febuary but my local GameStation was selling the March edition of "PlayStation Official Magazine - UK"... don't ask why.

So I look on the back to find a small Bioshock screen

Quote:

Stunning aquatic horror/shooter set to make waves on PS3 being the text next to the image. I turn to the page about Bioshock.

Quote:

Bioshock's version of a decaying underwater utopia is one of the most original ideas coming to PS3.

Then there is a lot of text about the idea of the game.

If anyone would like pics, please say so.

ADL, why don't you post the PC images and resize to 1280x720. It would look a hell a lot better!

Mine's prettier.

who listens to ea? i would answer this but i dont wanna offend anyone. besides ea.

NASTAQ

Right now, most of us here think the 360 will be on top for this generation, with the battle for second place between Sony and Nintendo (and that's a major shock

I'm on a verge of buying a wii, but i can't find one. I own a X360 (which obviously needs surge protector or it'll eventually get "spiked") and a PS3 (trying hard to prevent a spike)

:My crappy ports does not sell well on the PS3, so get a Wii and 360, where people keep buying my god awful ports
Madden NFL 2005 was brilliant across the board 3 major consoles. 9.5 out of 10 those years. Best balance of game-play. Unfortunately, Madden NFL 2005 isn't a PS3 game. Interesting aspect of Madden 2005 is it had competition from a much cheaper, better football game from Visual Concepts.

Shut your employees up, just like you did when they weren't getting paid for overtime, get off your crown of Madden Football, and try to actually make a good game for once.

That's what all Europeans and Austriasian countries say about Madden. How do i know if you're from one of those countries?

Yeah, EA's crappy ports aren't selling on the PS3. Guess what? Besides Resistance, which sold decently, nothing else is.

I bought Ridge Racer 7 because you don't buy a $500 console plus $60 insurance to play 1 game. I believe that is something that anyone here can agree with. Plus, it got the 2nd highest launch title score at IGN.

Bluray vs. HDDVD replication costs revealed

I know.....let's let Sony worry about the 25 GB BD cost, we buy the good PS3 games for $60 and not think about it cos it's a waste of brain power. Good reason why, you'll have to go back to the drawing board and get hyped up for 300 GB Holographic Versicle Disc in 2009 as the next big movie format. By then, you can see a lot of bargain Blu-ray movies, and BD-RW in your computer are sorta mainstream.

Much has been speculated about the cars that will be available on GT5, but apparently no one's talking about the licensed tracks. So what new tracks do you wanna see in GT5? I personally would love to see some legendary tracks such as Monza, Silverstone, Indianapolis, Hockenheim, and most important than all, Spa-Francorchamps.

I want whatever they manage to rip me off on. At least Gran Turismo 4 you can buy for $40 when it came out at Gamestop used. Gran Turismo 4 had everything!

<http://www.gametrailers.com/gamepage.php?id=38>

every year at SEMA a car is chosen to be put into the next Gran Turismo game. It is a very prestigious award as the game is the most popular driving simulator to date.

Now imagine this, with the Eyetoy 2's technology to upload your face into your PS3 and create your very own avatar of yourself. Imagine if you could use your eyetoy to upload your exact car into the game. (Dents and all lol).

This would open a whole new ground to customizing and make the next GT amazing!

edit: click the gran turismo awards vid from the link.

Impossible. What you pay for is what you get! No expansion paks, no freebee cars (and limited cars on the BD won't hurt the overall score...I guarantee you that)

By the way Renegade, what relm you play on? East/West/etc.? I have a few accounts on USeast for D2:LoD if you wanted to hook up.

I'll play on USeast....my user account is renegadeviking. I have many saved single player d2 files saved on the net. It'd be more fun starting out with a lvl 50 or higher character then level 1. Do you play often? I have nothing to do today actually.

Street Fighter 2 being Remade

What is wrong with just playing the < $20 Street Fighter Anniversary Collection?

You know Capcom's repeating failure with Street Fighter EX! Street Fighter EX and King of Fighters Maximum Impact are not good ones.

Ok so I just finished watching a Gamespot interview with one of the guys from AM2 who worked on VF5 for PS3. Don't ask me his name. Anyhow in the translation text there is a bit where he says they needed the Blu-ray space to fit all of the extra character items that are unlockable. Or something to that affect anyway.

What is true here is Xbox 360 will be on DL-DVD and the PS3 version will be on BD. VF5 is on BD simply because every (100 %) ps3 game coming out are also on BD. No conflicts. That's just how things are. It's true that VF5 can fit on DVD /w compression and lossy audio codecs like WMA.

Hold up that doesn't make sense, VF5 for the Xbox 360 is coming out months after the PS3 version so why cut content from the PS3 version if it's not going to be a simultaneous release?

As much as Sony fans would love to have more content, SEGA-AM2 chose to do the PS3 version first, and had a easier time porting the code to Xbox 360 so there was time to spare to add levels and characters, because later ports always have more content.

Was true for

DOA 2X for Xbox

Sonic Adventure DX for Cube

Skies of Arcadia for Cube

Fatal Frame 2 for Xbox and PS2 after the original

Resident Evil 4 for PS2

Resident Evil Code Veronica X for PS2

Star Ocean 3 for NTSC PS2

Xbox port of Mortal Kombat Deadly Alliance

Conker Live and Reloaded

Virtua Fighter 4 Evolution

Hydro Thunder for Dreamcast

I can see the 360 version coming out later being superior than the PS3

I discovered the absolutely right answer to why the 360 version is superior to the PS3 version.

Virtua Fighter 5 is running on the Sega Lindbergh arcade board. It makes perfect sense...the arcade is powered by DirectX 9.0c

CPU: Pentium 4 3.0 GHz with 1 megabyte L2 Cache, Hyper Threading Compatible, 800MHz FSB

RAM: 184 pin DDR SDRAM PC3200(400 MHz) 512 MB × 2(Dual)

GPU: NVIDIA GeForce 6800 AGP (NV40), 256 Bit GDDR3 256 MB, Compatible Vertex Shader 3.0 & Pixel Shader 3.0

Sound: 64 channel, 5.1 ch SP-DIF

LAN: On board, 10/100/1000 BASE-TX. JVS I/O Connector

Serial: 2 Channel (can switch one channel between 232C and 422)

Other: USB port x 4, Compatible HDTV (High Definition), DVD Drive Support, Sega ALL.NET online support the physics card is not a godsend but it does help your graphics card run at a much more considerable ease when possible.

That's not a problem for now. The most complex game on my HDD is Guild Wars Nightfall (I'm in GW: Prophecies at the moment....resilient to play it due to my stubbornness to finish with Final Fantasy 12 and talk on the forums at the same time with constant sleep. Thinking Guild Wars can run on a Geforce 6600 GT at 1280x1024 fine so that shows how much slack i have before my system gets laggy again!

Any new games like Battlefield 2142, Neverwinter Nights 2 will run at max settings on my G8800 GTX and Battlefield 2142 I thought is a higher-end PC game. What I'm saying is I have to do this all single player.....no online FPS for me coz satellite broadband limitations. My favorite MMORPG takes hardly any resources because it is Diablo 2 /w Lord of Destruction. Consoles have a more fun single player experience

If I feel I need extra for my eyes only graphics boost for just UT3 than I'll get a 64 MB physics card. Haven't decided if I want software over hardware I don't need or vice versa.

1up too of course. I just want to repeat the success of eGameaddiction.com...they post their collections for every platform and everybody seemed to love to comment on the person above them, and jolly good thread.

Someone please reply....you can even lie and post the largest collection on IGN!

Got updates

2010, Cell-based CPU and no BD-ROM confirmed by Engadget I think.

Epic Games Gears up For Greatness

Sony is lucky they can even distribute UT3! They don't exactly have the PS2-level of game releases! Any decent title is welcomed in my opinion! Of course this is the internet, you can exaggerate that and say UT3 for PS3 doesn't have the balls of x360. (IGN PS3 score 8.5, IGN X360 score 9.4)

Without such support they would end up like the Dreamcast or Sega Saturn.

I knew what G_H_G was saying when PS3 came out. Forza 2 could've had 2 DVDs like Gran Turismo 2 had 2 CDs, but the extra media would cut into profits and Microsoft can get $60 outta everybody /w the 12 environments. Forza 2 is going to be a hot game when it comes out. It'll be at the bottom of top games at IGN and Gamespot. Most X360 owners are going to invest in Forza 2 because it's like GT and that's what happened in 2005. Forza 2 sold Xboxes above Gamecube sales in the USA.

I know...how about all the tracks X360 can't decompress normally in Forza 2, the game extracts from 7zip files onto the HDD! That's clever, but it won't happen....for no reason. Makes me mad.

The only games X360 has multi-DVDs are Blue Dragon (3 DVDs) and Half-life 2 Orange Box (2 DVDs)?

The answer to this thread is NO... Blu-ray is not NEEDED for games right now!

You know Sony....rather waste 3/4 of a BD than have a DVD logo on the PS3 game.

and my ps1 is a launch console too and is still as strong as the day i got it

I find that hard to believe, but it's possible. Everybody with a PS1 (not PSone) said it had terrible lifespan. You had to turn it vertically or upside down, because something wore away the laser diode.

i was a bit slow hitting save so that's why this reply may look strange

Sony will still support the PS3 until 2013/2014.

Sony will stop supporting it in 2012 with some RPG, but EA is going to put Madden on it in 2013 and 2014.

I was wondering if anyone expected their PS3 to last the full duration of this gen or do you expect to have to replace it?

My Xbox 360 lasted a year w/o issues, but it wasn't hardware failure, it was a grounding issue... The fact I didn't have a good surge protector.

New TUROK PS3 Screens!

I am trying really hard to find the superior game engine...Unreal Engine 3 or Cryengine 2.

Don't get me wrong...I paid more money on my Geforce 8800 GTX than i did on my PS3. Geforce 8800 GTX has 768 MB GDDR4 and runs Crysis. But I've been trying to get thru Final Fantasy 12 and am thinking of playing Rogue Galaxy now that i've bought it two days ago (before the extremely cold weather set in) and I admit, my analysis of these incredible engines are wearing thin. I'm still shocked that game engine in Crysis is that unbelievably real. My most realistic PC game is F.E.A.R. which is two years old so believe me I'm behind the times a bit.

Okay this is F.E.A.R on my computer and currently the best i have. Sorry. I feel ashamed I'm behind the times....

I still have Suikoden , my first and only RPG . I dont think it works anymore though , but was some real fun back in the day .

Great, I played that game too. I was playing it for 10 hrs. Try resurfacing it.

The game of recent has to be Parasite Eve II

Squaresoft making horror survival games didn't make sense to me. I was afraid to touch it when I bought PS1 in 2002.

You don't need to mod a PS2 to play backups either, not these days.

I know PCSX2 can't get up to 60 fps even on high-end PCs yet (Core 2 Duo, 2 Geforce 8800 GTX, 2 Gig RAM). Needs work to do this. Otherwise, I'm lost on how you can play backups on PS2s w/o modchips!

F-22 Raptor vs. F-16 Fighting Falcon (2007-03-10 17:33)

Two main plains of the US Airforce. Which one is used and why? It's really elementary. The US Airforce (and Navy cos the F35 has vertical lifting ability) F22 is too expensive for missions that F-16 can handle so that's it's primary issue. While it's used, it's used in worst case scenarios. Why have both aircraft? It's it's primary purpose. The F-22 Raptor will someday be outdated by a X plane, probably unmanned version of it. If I was the military I just use F-16 until dogfights got too tough for it (won't happen).

I have this game.
